Talks On Trouble

Cincinnati, Feb. 5.—The Ford jury had not reported at 4:30.

Cincinnati, O., Feb. 5.—Judge James R. Swing finished reading his charge at 12:40 o'clock, and the case of the state of Ohio against Mrs. Jeannette Stewart Ford, on an indictment alleging blackmail, was submitted to the jury.

The deputy court clerk handed to Foreman Leventor two blank forms—one for a verdict of conviction, the other for acquittal—and the jurors were then conducted to their room.

The plan to have the trial continued over until Monday was changed Saturday morning when attorneys Thorndyke and Capella, told Judge Swing that they would withdraw their arguments and Assistant Prosecutor Cash stated that the prosecution would make but a brief reply.

All of the letters read and submitted in the testimony were sent into the jury room, together with all other exhibits offered.

Mrs. Ford sobbed aloud as the closing speeches were being made and her attorney made several efforts to comfort her.

Assistant Prosecutor Cash announced before Judge Swing at the opening of the trial Saturday that steps would be taken against those responsible for the publication in the morning papers of a statement of her past, purporting to come from Mrs. Ford.

"That statement borders on contempt," said Cash. "It was designed for the purpose of preventing a cross examination, a scheme of getting before the public and the jury a statement by the defendant when there was no chance for cross examination after the case was closed."

Each of the jurors was asked whether he had read a statement bearing on the case. Each denied that he had.

Thorndyke read his last appeal Saturday morning from manuscript.

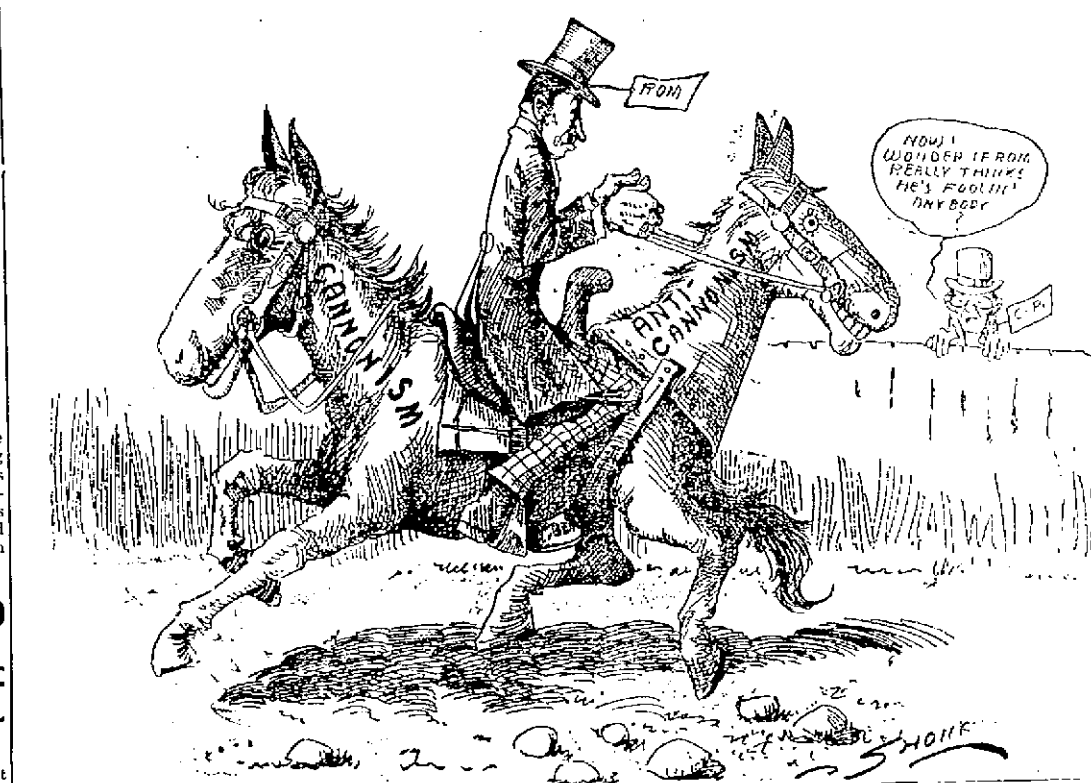

"I never heard a human being denounced as this woman was by the prosecutor in his address to the jury Friday," began Thorndyke. "There was sounded in my ears the words of the law."

Five of J. P. Hall's children are down with measles at the second hand dealer's home on West Front street. The family has had more than its share of sickness for the winter and mother and two of the children had long sieges of typhoid fever this winter.

MINERS' STRIKE
NOW IMMINENT70 Men Trapped
By An Explosion(By United Press.)
Toledo, O., Feb. 5.—It is now conceded by the officials of the United Mine Workers of America and the coal mine operators that the only thing that can avert the most expensive strike in the history of Bituminous coal mining on the North American continent is the calling of a special convention of the miners to meet conditions arising from the failure of the joint conference at Toledo to organize and fix a scale for the central competitive fields.

The national executive board of the United Mine Workers met at 10 o'clock this morning to consider the situation and was still in session at a late hour this afternoon. Columbus is already a candidate for the special convention.

Lewis Looks
For A Strike.(By Associated Press.)
Toledo, Feb. 5.—President Lewis of the United Mine Workers stated that there would be a general suspension of work in the bituminous field of the country on April 1st, if agreements on wage scale were not reached by that date.

National statistician Richards of the United Mine Workers, said today a national convention of miners would probably be called to meet before April 1, to reconsider the instructions of the Indianapolis convention.

The rule requiring contracts in all states to be negotiated before any are signed may be amended so as to exempt Illinois, where the situation now blocks all settlements elsewhere.

Miss Ida Brockway On The Stand In Ford Case

continued the tears ceased. Her eyes closed in a stony stare. Finally she seemed unaware of the proceedings, staring about with unseeing eyes.

Atty. Thorndyke Defends Woman.

There were but 25 minutes of the day's session remaining when Attorney Thorndyke took the floor. He said: "There is a well-founded suspicion that there are men higher up, as well as lower down, in this case."

He emphasized the fact that Warriner had testified that he had sent Cooke away with Mrs. Ford as early as 1901, a year before he had met Mrs. Ford. He blamed this act of Warriner for Mrs. Ford's downfall, saying it was the first step of her awful past. He did not seek to uphold Mrs. Ford's character, but argued that because she had done wrong things was no reason why she should be charged with blackmail.

Mrs. Ford Faints Away.

Mrs. Ford fainted away as court adjourned. It was fully half an hour before she was able to leave the courtroom. Mrs. Mattie McDermott, mother of the boy who was killed by Frank Condon, cashier in the local customs office, rushed to her side and she stayed with her until she rallied. She was finally assisted to a cab and taken to her flat in the Sun building.

Mrs. Ford Interviewed.

The Enquirer of Saturday said: Clinging to her three-year-old child, Mrs. Jeannette Ford yesterday made her first full statement concerning the Warriner case.

"If it were not for this little one," said Mrs. Ford, "I would go on the stand, expose my whole past and show the jury the awful lies that Charley Warriner told on the witness stand. I never blackmailed him! I never knew that he was short, and all that he gave me he gave me willingly as a friend. My eyes have been opened. I would willingly go to the penitentiary and leave all behind sooner than to realize as I do now that I have been the duped and the toy of every one connected with this trouble."

She began her story with a recital of how she came to this city from a well-to-do family of Portsmouth. She was the wife of Alfred Ford, from whom she separated shortly after the birth of her son. She told of meeting Cooke in the Sun Rafael building when he was ignorant of the fact that he was married.

"When I discovered that he was married the affair had gone too far," she said. "My life had been ruined."

She charged Cooke with the squandering of her fortune, some $20,000 or $30,000.

"Shortly after the discovery that he was married," she said, "Cooke confessed to me that he was many thousands of dollars short in his accounts. His wife and family deserted him. But I loved him and vowed I would stick to him in his hour of need. Mrs. Cooke deserted him because she feared exposure and arrest. He made no secret of his infatuation for me. He caused them to wonder at the office if he wasn't living beyond his means. The shortage was discovered."

How She Met Warriner. "One night I went with him to Wyoming. It was the fatal night of my life. I accompanied Cooke to Warriner's home. I stood outside while Cooke conferred with Warriner, though I did not know at the time that it was Warriner with whom he was conferring. Cooke came back from the conference radiant. He told me that things had been fixed up and that he was not to be prosecuted. 'You and I,' he said, 'will go at once to New York and forget our troubles, and my family, who have deserted me, can shift for themselves.' I did not know until I heard it on the stand from his own lips that Charley Warriner had insisted that Cooke go away and take me with him. It was all a matter of bargain and sale between them that Cooke was to have his liberty as long as he could keep me away from this city, where people might suspect things."

She said their period of happiness in New York was but brief. She alleged that when Cooke's family learned of his escape from punishment they wanted him back.

"He had at that time some of the money he stole from the Big Four," said she, "and Mrs. Cooke came on to New York to get Cooke and the money. The result was a fight at a time when I was in a delicate condition. I spent a long period in a New York hospital and submitted to an operation. Cooke's wife secured all his money in New York and has had it ever since."

She told of the filing of her suit in New York under the common law statutes, and stated that to avoid paying her any money Cooke transferred all his property to his wife. He left for Chicago and she followed him.

Says Comstock Got Her Drunk.

"I came to Cincinnati," she said, "to enlist the services of Frank Comstock, who, I thought, had shouldered his shortage, to make him treat me fairly, as I thought I deserved, after all I had been through with. Instead of that, Comstock got me drunk and I spent a week with him in dissipation. I do not wish to complain of Comstock, because all he tried to do was to make me forget my troubles, and in doing so he told me his own."

After this Mrs. Ford said she went to Chicago, where she found Cooke and his family united against her.

"This infuriated me," she said, "and I told Cooke what occurred with Comstock in this city. He gave me a merciless beating. The marks of which I carry to this day. This was the first time I ever met Charley Warriner. It was in Chicago. He urged me not to get into a fight and said if I would leave Chicago and come to Cincinnati he would pay my expenses here, and intimated that if I would shake off Cooke he himself would assist me until I could form some plans for the future. I consented to this readily, but as soon as I got back to Cincinnati I wanted Cooke again. I went to Chicago, where I met Cooke, who urged that I not only accept Warriner's assistance but Comstock's as well."

She recalled the fact that he had bitterly accused Comstock of intimacy with her only a short time before this happened.

"I had no idea that Warriner was short," she continued, "it seemed to me so kindly and so interested in my welfare. I know too well what his object was now."

The Fight Over Cooke. She then detailed the fight between herself and Mrs. Cooke over Edgar Cooke's love. The birth of his babe, she said, resulted in law suits. She brought civil and criminal actions against Cooke, and Mrs. Cooke filed suit against her. She detailed the proposed settlement of the notes which were to be paid until Jeannette was 18 years of age at the rate of $100 per month. One of the suits finally came to settlement and Warriner got her to take a less amount. She said that at that time Cooke was well to do and could well afford to pay this money for his child.

"I had thought Warriner was acting as my friend and counselor in my difficulties," Mrs. Ford continued. "It was to him that I would turn at all times. During the past years I gave up Cooke altogether. I have been constantly meeting Charley at hotels and other places. I cannot say that he ever mistreated me during all this time. He was always kindly and friendly to me. There is not a harsh word to remember. I could have fallen to the floor when I heard him testify the way Huntington Sunday to take a position."

71 TAKE THE EXAMS.

Seventy-one would-be census enumerators took the civil service examination before the examining committee composed of Wesley Griver and Wells Crawford at the high school building Saturday.

The class was composed of 62 men and 9 women. Thirty-five took the examination Saturday morning and thirty-six in the afternoon. Thirty of the applicants were from this city, among whom could be seen Pete Smith, George Keller, William Miller and Joe Mitchell. Messrs. Griver and Crawford stated to a Times representative that they were forbidden to make known the names of the applicants or to give out for publication a list of the questions asked. It is stated the examination was more in the nature of a test in penmanship, legibility and speed to count the greater number of points. One applicant finished the test in one hour and fifteen minutes.

Death Removes Splendid Lady

The death of Mrs. Conrad Amberg, brief mention of which was made in Friday's Times, occurred Friday afternoon at a quarter of four, in the midst of sorrowing friends and relatives who surrounded her bedside.

Mrs. Conrad Amberg was born January 28, 1834, in Hanover county, Virginia. She was a daughter of Benjamin Overstreet Wilson, and her mother's maiden name was Anna Heath. After she married Mr. Amberg the family moved to Portsmouth, where they lived for many years.

The death of Mrs. Amberg came as a great shock to her family. She had been feeble for about 10 years, and had had a severe cold for over eight weeks, but Friday morning she seemed bright and happy, and even in better health than usual. But the death angel was hovering near, and Friday noon she was taken so seriously ill, and death came a little later.

She was a member of Trinity Methodist Episcopal church and was a good Christian woman. Her piety and cheerfulness during the long years of illness were remarkable. She is survived by her husband, Conrad Amberg, and nine children. She was married twice, the first time to James Clark, and the second time to Conrad Amberg.

Her children by her first marriage were: Robert and Benjamin Clark, and by her second, May, John, Charles, Clarence, Amelia, Claude, Ferdinand and Miriam.

The funeral will be held from the house Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock and Rev. Hartinger will officiate.

The Bible And Shakespeare

The very delightful contest arranged by Mrs. Wm. Gates for the entertainment of her guests Thursday evening, in which thirty quotations from the Bible and from Shakespeare's plays, were to be assigned to their rightful places, brought out much interesting comment upon the fact, that in many passages in the Bible and in Shakespeare's writings there is a marked similarity both in sentiment and phraseology.

The following are only a few of such passages, which I have from time to time made note of, and which will, I think, be enjoyed by those who were so fortunate as to spend Thursday evening at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Gates:

Proverbs 17:17—A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.
Julius Caesar—A friend should bear his friends' infirmities.

Ecclesiastes 5:12—The abundance of the rich, will not suffer him to sleep, but the sleep of a laboring man is sweet.

Henry IV—Golden Care keeps the parts of slumber open wide, but the man whose brow is with hoarsely bidden slumber, snores out the watches of the night.

2nd Corinthians 11:6—But though I be rude in speech, Othello—Rude am I in speech.

Solomon's Song 1:6—Look not upon me because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me.
Merchant of Venice—Mistake me not for my complexion, it is the shadowy livery of the burning sun.

Job 3:6—Job thus cursed the day of his birth—"Let it not be joined unto the days of the year, let it not come into the number of months."

Macbeth—May this accused hour stand accursed in the calendar.

1st Samuel 2:34—Consume their eyes and grieve their heart.

New Owner Of Hotel

The arrival here Friday of W. J. McLaughlin of Vivian, Texas, developed the fact that the hotel Portsmouth property had again changed hands.

Mr. McLaughlin is the new owner having purchased the hotel of E. A. Hodge, now of Altus, Oklahoma. Arrangements are under way whereby George Bennett, the present tenant, will lease the hotel and continue to operate the same.

Macbeth—Show his eyes, and grieve his heart.

Psalms 23:15—Thou hast brought me into the dust of death.
Macbeth—He lighted fools the way to dusty death.

1st Samuel 17:35—I caught him by his beard and smote him.
Othello—I took him by the throat and smote him.

Psalms 84:5—What is man, thou art mindful of him.  Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels—and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou hast given him dominion over the works of thy hands.

Hamlet—What a piece of work is man! How noble, in reason, how infinite in faculties, in form and moving, how express and admirable. In action how like an angel. In apprehension, how like a God!

Awarded to Canton

According to a report just published by T. M. Chivington, president of the American Association, Ches Spencer and Chubby Collins have been awarded by Toledo to Canton, of the O. P. League. This story was published in The Times several weeks ago, and will be put up to the National Commission to settle. Pres. Armour of Toledo has no claim on the services of Spencer and Collins, despite the fact that he is making a great big bluff.

He Will Sell Sieling Stock

J. P. Purdum, trustee, will sell the stock of goods of the L. H. Sieling Co. at their former place of business, Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The trustee is acting on an order of sale given him by Referee Mark A. Crawford, and has elected to sell them at private sale. The goods are appraised at $1,854.

Joe Books Gallipolis

The ground hog legend does not phase Joe Kountz, for he has already made arrangements with a game of ball with Gallipolis, said game to be played in that city in early May. Mr. Kountz is manager of the P. C. C. team, and predicts that the club will be fully 50 per cent stronger in 1910 than it was in the year just passed, when it held its own with the best of them.

Mrs. Adam Youngman, of East Eleventh street, who was stricken with paralysis a few days ago, is reported but slightly improved.

Stands By Mother, Lets His Wife Go

Rather than forsake his mother, wife will probably return to her old home in declining days, John Valodin, house in Kentucky.

John Valodin, a well known McGraw farmer, Friday decided to separate from his wife. Formal articles of separation were by mutual consent prepared by Olin Vosey, the youthful Nile township squaire. Valodin agreed to pay his wife $600 at the end of his mother's life in consideration of which he is to be released of all further obligations to her, such as alimony, etc. The two appeared equally pleased over the terms of the agreement as they left the court room.

Valodin and his wife, who was Miss Anna Northeast, of Mayesville, Ky., have been married six years. They have no children. The wife, who is a candidate for the nomination as representative at the primary to be held May 17th next. The support of my Republican friends is respectfully solicited.

NATE B. GILBERT.

Cap Is Now Surveyor

Word was received from Capt. George Batterson, a former attorney of this city, that he was employed in a surveying crew in Idaho. Cap writes that he is carrying a chain, but that the work is remunerative and that it is agreed on several pounds of flesh and says that Horace Greely was right about going West and growing up with the country. He has been allotted a parcel of land by the government and expects to take up his abode thereon on the first of May, when he will likely send for his wife and baby who reside in this city.

WANTS TRIAL IN OUR TEAM

George Wurster, acting president of the Portsmouth Baseball Co., has received a letter from H. H. Murray, of Ironton, asking for a trial in the Ohio State League. Murray has played here several times and impressed the fans favorably. He may have his wish gratified.

Steadily Recovering.
Mrs. Agnes B. Roe, who has been quite sick for the past three weeks at her home on East Third street, is now steadily improving.

Ferdinand, a young son of Charles Donohoe of West Ninth street, is ill with a severe attack of measles.

AFFINITIES LOOM UP IN DIVORCE CASES

This was "break away" day in Common Pleas court.

In other words, it was "divorce day."

The court house was filled with men, women and children, some as principals and others as witnesses. Pretty babies were playing about the court room, all unmindful of the trouble existing.

The first case called was Carington vs. Carington, wherein Bertha Carington sought to be relieved of the incubus of a husband who for four years has treated her with extreme cruelty, beating her, getting drunk and staying away at nights. She said he had been guilty of illicit relations with a girl named Nora Hiddlebarger and that he had acknowledged it.

Witnesses were called, proving the good character of the plaintiff. One woman testified that Carington had gone with other girls, one of them Stella George. W. R. Sprague appeared for the prosecution and C. M. Searl for the defense.

A decree was granted. The parties live at Scioto Farm, and the defendant is a stationary engineer, employed at the Buckeye Fire Brick plant.

The case of Nannie Black vs. Jesse Black was heard behind closed doors, in the annex to the clerk's office. A great many witnesses were called, both men and women and each was taken in and examined separately. The parties live in the city and the plaintiff only asks for alimony, not divorce. In her petition she charged extreme cruelty. Plain drugs in tablet form, and Olive Tablet's maiden name was Minego. She claims that her husband, bilious, constipated, and your liver makes from twenty to thirty dollars a week, but does not provide for herself and child. She lives with her father. Judge Blair advised them to live together for the sake of their child, if for no other reason. He reserved his time and see how quickly they clear up your complexion. Note: Law

Ella Dixon vs. Charles Dixon, happy and contented they make you was another case of marital unhappiness. The plaintiff is 23 years old, and was less than 20 when they were married. She was living at McDermott when she filed divorce proceedings. She claimed desertion and ill treatment, and had been guilty of adultery.

utterly. She offered in evidence letters and pictures of his alleged affinity, Lizzie Sowards, and said she had taken them out of her husband's pockets.

Ida Dixon, a small girl and relative of defendant, said defendant had given her a nickel to take care of the baby while defendant and Lizzie went to Millbrook together. She had seen him with her.

Judge Blair said he didn't think the time covered by the alleged desertion was long enough to warrant the granting of a decree and reserved his decision.

Institute Is To Meet

The Scioto County Teachers' institute will meet at the high school here February 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, of Mansfield, will be the principal speaker.

Ex-Policeman John Herrick continues quite ill at his home on Market street.

THE NAME TELLS ITS VALUE.

The name Olive Tablets was suggested by the action of Olive Oil on the liver, by the healing and nourishing effect on the bowels. Dr. Edwards, during fifteen years of experience, five medical practice and study, not divorce. In her petition she charged extreme cruelty. Plain drugs in tablet form, and Olive Tablet's maiden name was Minego. She claims that her husband, bilious, constipated, and your liver makes from twenty to thirty dollars a week, but does not provide for herself and child. She lives with her father. Judge Blair advised them to live together for the sake of their child, if for no other reason. He reserved his time and see how quickly they clear up your complexion. Note: Law

EDGAR MILLAR DOING WORK FOR N. & W.

The Wakefield correspondent of the Lucasville Rural-Gazette says that "Attorney Edgar Millar, of Portsmouth, was in Wakefield looking after the interests of the N. & W. Railway company, endeavoring to adjust the damage valuations to be placed on the new construction work which will begin here soon. Mr. Millar, while seemingly very busy, does not consider all the items of damage, which to the farmers are very important."

Houses Are In Demand

Boom is on at Lucasville. The Rural Gazette, lively newspaper published there, says there is a scarcity in houses.

Blair Pays For Pie

Judge Blair has paid for that pie and plate. Soon after the incident on the way to Youngstown the Judge obtained the address of the restaurant keeper at Holmesville where he got the pie from the C. A. and G. conductor and the probable price of the pie and plate, and immediately sent more than enough to even the expense to the cafe keeper. Saturday morning the Judge received a receipt and many thanks from the restaurant keeper. So the case against the Judge is off the docket.

Improving Property

George A. Flagg who purchased the G. A. Powell property on the headwaters of Dry Run, Saturday went to work improving the main residence and putting up a ten-unit house. He will modernize the main building and occupy it with his family. He will beautify the premises and seek to introduce scientific methods of farming and gardening into the section.

Police To Go To Funeral

Mayor Searcy and Chief Davidson have decided that if it is agreeable to the family, the entire police in uniform will attend the funeral of the late Capt. "Bully" Williams, out of respect to his many years' faithful service as an officer.

The mayor and chief themselves also expect to attend the obsequies.

Haines Is Improving

Arthur J. Haines, the Bloom township farmer who tried to commit suicide by the attempted route at his home near South Webster Thursday evening, is gradually recovering from the effects of the poison and Saturday morning was able to sit up.

GIVES AWAY $2.50

TO THE SICK

The Widely Known Nerve Specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., Gives His Book and $2.50 Worth of Neuropathic Treatment.

Sick people whose nerves are weak or deranged, who have a weak heart, liver, stomach or kidneys; blues, headache, dizziness, nervousness or dullness; nervous dyspepsia, irritability, cold hands and feet, backache or rheumatism; shortness of breath, palpitation, irregular heart beat or dropsy; nervousness or sleeplessness, trembling or hysteria, would do well to accept Dr. Miles' liberal offer. You may never have another such opportunity.

His Neuropathic Treatments for this class of diseases are the result of 25 years' study and immense experience and are thoroughly scientific and remarkably successful. They are so successful that we do not hesitate to offer a trial free to any sick one.

Every treatment is especially prepared for each patient and consists of a curative elixir, tonic tablets, eliminating pills, and a plaster. Years of trial have demonstrated that this treatment is three times successful as that usually prescribed by physicians.

Mr. U. McLean, Neola, Iowa, cured after having heart trouble 12 years. Mrs. Jeanette Ady, Sandusky, O., cured of nervous and heart troubles after others failed. Mr. L. M. Simmons, Lamb, Ill., cured of kidney trouble after several physicians failed. Mrs. Joseph Wisler, Peru, Ind., "Oxide my life to your treatment." Many cures from your state sent upon request.

Write the doctor at once. Describe your disease, stating age, weight, how long sick, etc. He will send you FREE a $2.50 Neuropathic Treatment prepared especially for you, valuable advice and his new book on "Neuropathy"—"Curing through the nerves." Address, Dr. Franklin Miles, Dept. N., 729 to 738 Main St., Elkhart, Ind.

Edward, eldest son of Thomas Brock of East Front street, is very ill with pneumonia. His younger brother Paul only recently recovered from a long siege.

Shaw Has Bought Two Fast Horses

Must Build New Race Track

The Lucasville Rural-Gazette says that the 15 feet of ground which the Norfolk & Western railway desires for their double track work along the fair grounds will spoil the race track.

The ground desired is all on the east side of the present right of way and will extend into the race track.

This will throw the westbound trains very close to the track, as it now lays, and as westbound trains would face horses rounding the turn from the far stretch, it will be necessary to construct a new track as it would be an utter impossibility to race horses on the present track under these conditions.

Funeral Of Capt. Williams

Rev. Dr. David S. Tappan of Circleville, former pastor of the First Presbyterian church of this city, will officiate at the funeral of Capt. William B. Williams.

Dr. Tappan is an old friend of the family and gladly consented to conduct the funeral which will take place from the late home, No. 30 West Third street Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Mrs. C. D. Smith Saturday moved from the Baird property on East Second street to the Grimes hotel, of which she has assumed the management.

Mayor James N. Kates, of Har-den, was in the city Saturday en route to Bunn's Vista and Rome on business trip.

Harry D. Shaw, a popular N. & W. passenger conductor of this city, has turned turfman according to the American Sportsman. The current issue of that paper says that Mr. Shaw has purchased of W. A. Anderson, of Greenfield, two well bred and promising young colts by R. Antime 2-07 1-4 and out of mares by Bobby Burns 2-19 1-4 and Gambretta Wilkes 2-19 1-4. They will be prepared for their future campaigns at the Portsmouth track. The Sportsman also reports that Ralph Calvert owns the great little pacing mare Daisy Elder 2-14 1-4 that started on her racing career before fully 2 years old. She is being regularly used as a brood-mare now.

Knights to Meet Sunday

A meeting of Knights of Columbus will be held Sunday at 3 o'clock at John Russell's store to complete plans for their big initiation, which will be held March 6, instead of Washington's birthday.

Gets Permit To Build

A building permit was issued by Clerk H. F. Thompson, of the service department, to James H. Distel Saturday for the erection of two frame cottages in the Elmwood addition, East Eighth street, to cost $1200 each.

N. & W. Bought Right Of Way

The N. & W. has bought the right of way through the Valley Simpson and J. H. Rockwell farms, near Lucasville.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Bender are laid up at their home with an attack of grip.

Why Does It Cure

Not because it is Sarsaparilla, but because it is a medicine of peculiar merit, composed of more than twenty different remedial agents effecting phenomenal cures of troubles of the blood, stomach, liver and bowels. Thus Hood's Sarsaparilla cures scrofula, eczema, anemia, catarrh, nervousness, that tired feeling, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, and builds up the system. Get it today in the usual liquid form or in chocolate tablet form called Sarsacola.

MORE DIVORCE CASES HEARD

The divorce case of Ida Youngman vs. John Youngman came up Saturday afternoon, Moulton for plaintiff and Ball for defendant. It was a case on cross-petition, the plaintiff having originally filed proceedings. She denied that she had disregarded her marital vows, and said she left him for good and sufficient cause. Her husband had been guilty of cruelty and neglect, and untrue to his marriage vows. Neighbors and friends appeared to testify to her good reputation. Judge Ball did not fight the case. The decree was granted to the wife, alimony to be agreed on later. The husband is a foreman at Selby's.

The case of Emma Warner vs. William Warner came up next, A. H. Bannan for plaintiff and Judge Miner for defendant. Temporary alimony was asked. Four fine looking boys, sons of the parties, were witnesses and Judge Blair went into secret session calling the boys separately. The case was continued, with the understanding that an effort would be made to get the parties to live together. Otherwise a legal separation and division of property was to be had. There is a little daughter to be looked after. Some of the boys are old enough to take care of themselves.

Wasn't it A Mean Trick?

Alleging that two West Side boys dyed and perfumed polecat furs black and sold them to him children; that he receives a pension of $16 a month, and is physically unable to maintain himself; that defendant abandoned her June 1, 1909. She says defendant has money in the Fidelity Building and Loan association, therefore she prays that defendant be restrained from making way with his means pending this suit. Bannan & Bannan for plaintiff.

John Likes To Walk

Seventy miles, walking to and from work, is what John Jeannette did this week, all because his trusty bicycle is in a hospital for repairs. John lives out on Pond Creek, but is employed at the Weaver works. He always rides his wheel, but since it was disabled he has been forced to hoof it to town and back. He failed to encounter a single vehicle all week, until Saturday morning when he was taken aboard one of the Hildebrand meat wagons.

Dr. Charles Warrenner was reported resting easier Saturday but is not yet considered out of danger.

TO HEAR CASE ON MONDAY

The case of the Gilbert Grocery company and M. F. Carroll & Sons vs. Richard L. Dawson was set for hearing Monday morning.

The plaintiffs claim that defendant is indebted in the sum of $219.05, with interest from June 27, 1908, for goods delivered by the Gilbert Grocery company; also in the sum of $64.83, with interest. They claim that Dawson & Neal were in business, pretending that Asa Dawson was the owner, when in fact Richard L. Dawson was the owner; that on June 26, 1908, he sold the store with the intent to hinder and defraud the creditors; that he did not give the notice of sale required by law in such cases. Plaintiff asks that a receiver be appointed. Holcomb, Miller and Thomas for plaintiffs.

MGR. MCGRAW FIGURES LIKE BUSINESS MAN

(By Al Bridwell.)

McGraw figures percentage in baseball in much the same manner as that of a dry goods merchant. We are told to try out certain plays, and if they bring the proper amount of returns we keep 'em up. If they fail to deliver they are discarded. McGraw says that a team to win the pennant must stand at .850 per cent, and if a certain trick play does not figure that high, then it is tossed in the waste basket.

—OO—

When it comes to the close points in baseball, Billy Doyle, of Portsmouth, has any man beaten I ever saw. He has the drafting business down pat, and by the way, has a knack of picking players from the bush who prove their ability. To any personal knowledge he has made the Dallas Tex. club fully $15,000 since he took up the scouting business. May his tribe increase.

Kling Puts His Case Up To Commission?

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Within another week Chicago fans will probably know once and for all whether John Kling is to play with the Cubs. Kling is to play with the Cubs, Kling is ineligible and that if Kling is ineligible the rule of the commission would be violated. But what to the West Side team, it has been stated on the best of authority that Kling is ineligible to give his player a he is eager to don the spangles again and has already placed his case before the national commission.

The reply he receives from the chairman of that body will decide the issue.

The first step for the supreme court of baseball is to decide whether or not its rule, passed last spring declaring ineligible for five years, players under contract who did not report to their teams by May 1, takes precedence over a National league rule, which states that each owner shall regulate the affairs of his own club.

Kling was given an indefinite leave of absence by President Clark W. Murphy. Therefore, it is argued, that Kling should not be allowed to return.

DISASTER AVERTED.

By calling on us and having your property insured before the fire occurs. It costs but a trifle when compared to losing the earnings of a life time by fire. Ulico did not report to their teams by May 1, takes precedence over a National league rule, which states that each owner shall regulate the affairs of his own club.

The Omaha, Nebraska Daily News of Jan. 23rd, devotes about half a column to a description of rare laces, unique jewels of great value and many other interesting articles belonging to a niece of Miss Irene Houston, Mrs. Herbert E. Gates of Omaha, a general collector of curios etc., in her frequent travels abroad and in this country. Among many treasures the collection includes magnificent diamonds and other precious stones in valuable settings, among which are intaglios, cameos, corals, including Greek and Roman intaglios cut in amethyst topaz and moon stones, many of them having been excavated from Pompeii - one, an amethyst intaglio about an inch in diameter showing the perfect outlines of a vestal virgin before a sacred fire. The treasures also include peasant jewelry which belong to the dowry of peasant girls from Switzerland and the Austrian and Bavarian Tyrol. Among the laces are altar pieces of flax lace over 250 years old, and pieces of very old Rose Point, Venetian, Milan and Genoa laces, of different periods. Old furniture from palatial foreign homes also is in the treasure from this fortunate collector of Mrs. Gates, some of the most valued pieces having belonged to the famous demesies.

The Fishers' class of twenty boys of the First Baptist Sun-

Smart Street Costumes For Young Women

The black velvet frock shown above, trimmed with battons, is a style that New York women will adopt at once because it is smart, comfortable and possesses that "chic" quality that New Yorkers are famous for. The "Dutch" neck makes this costume dressy enough for any but formal occasions, and with a pretty lace collar a finish that is effective is secured. As to the other garments, they are attractive and in the latest designs.

FADS FOR WOMEN

Some of the nets seen for the first time this season are exquisite. The coarser weaves of the fish net and the octagon weaves prevail, but in entirely new and pretty effects and combinations. For instance, one of the newest designs is an exact reproduction of garden netting, though extremely fragile and web-weby looking.

The weave is in a fine octagon, picked out in large garden nettings effect. The shape, with tiny black silk dots. The design is decidedly odd, and much prettier than can be imagined from this inadequate description.

Among the veils of chiffon and chiffon cloth are seen a variety of ombre effects. The newest idea is to have the lightest portion in the middle, or more correctly speaking, perhaps, not at the point directly covering the face. The veil becomes darker around as it approaches the drape hem, which is, of course, lemon.

The two toned chiffon veils, which are also new, show many pretty combinations. These cost from $1.95 upward. Veils of average size in plain and ombre effects are ninety-five cents each and upward, while those in extra sizes, 36x72 inches, in chiffon and chiffon cloth, are $1.35 to $2.

Accordion pleated skirts, and in fact entire dresses also, are seen among the new designs for spring house wear. One model is a separate skirt is closely accordeon pleated, the pleats being stitched down below the line of the hip, where the fulness falls free.

A girlish looking frock on exhibit was made with a skirt formed from three overlapping accordeon pleated ruffles, the waist also accordeon pleated and supported by a lace yoke. The pleats were folded into a belt of the same lace. The sleeves, three-quarter length, were pleated to fit the arm and were held down at intervals with bands of lace.

Creamed Shrimps. For a quart of the canned shrimps, allow one tablespoon of butter, a half table spoonful flour, one cupful heated cream, one beaten yolk of egg, salt, paprika and a drop or two of Worcestershire sauce. Melt the butter, add the flour, and when frothy, pour in the cream. When smooth and slightly thickened, add the shrimps, seasoning and egg yolk, serve on toast, in croutades or patty shells.

Hollandaise Sauce. This is particularly good to serve with boiled fish. Mix in a bowl two table spoonfuls butter, a ten spoonful lemon juice, a bit of bay leaf, a half dozen whole black peppers and if the butter is fresh a salt spoonful of salt. Add a cupful stock of water and the juice of a lemon. Place the bowl in a pan of hot water and stir until the butter melts. Take from the fire and stir a little of the warm mixture into the well beaten yolk of three eggs. When mixed, gradually add the remainder of the sauce, return to the fire and stir steadily until thickened. Add another table spoonful of butter and serve. This sauce is the foundation for lobster sauce or oyster sauce.

Shrimp Fritters. To three well beaten eggs add a pinch of salt, a quarter cupful milk, a table spoonful melted butter, a can of chopped shrimps and bread crumbs to make a stiff batter. Drop the mixture by the spoonful into boiling fat and fry to a light brown. Drain on paper and serve hot with any good fish sauce poured over them.

Maitre d'Hotel Butter. This is perhaps the simplest and best sauce to serve on fried or broiled fish. To make it beat a heaping table spoonful of butter to a cream in a warm bowl; add the juice of a lemon, a half table spoonful of salt and two tea spoonfuls of minced parsley. A point of nutmeg or bit of chives is sometimes added. If placed on

DAINTY FROCK FOR CHILD

By Mrs. Jane Ford.

Exceptionally pretty is the little frock pictured. It has been specially designed for developing the lovely dainties that show in spring and summer wear now. The pattern for it may be secured in four sizes, that will fit children between the ages of six months and five years. To copy it in the three years size, two and three-eighths yards of domestic seventeen inches wide, with one-half yard of all-over eighteen inches wide for the yoke, one and one-half yards of edging two and a half inches wide for the bertha, and one-half yard of thirty-six inch material for the sleeves will be needed.

607 4 SIZES 6 MONTHS TO 5 YEARS

The dress will be equally effective carried out in sheer black tulle or lawn, and the skirt and bertha finished with horizontal stripes. Made in this way, two and one-quarter yards of material thirty-six inches wide will be needed. The pattern may also be used for making evening dresses of gingham, chambray or percale.

When dark colors of these materials are selected, the dress may be given a youthful touch by using white for the yoke.

A striped line and white gingham could have the material for the yoke tucked so only the line showed and the edge of the bertha and sleeves introduced in a matching shade.

POLICE HUNT FOR A MISSING WOMAN

Police on Friday made a vigorous search for Miss Florence Davis, a pretty fifteen-year-old runaway girl from Chateaufort, W. Va.

An N. & W. fireman, a friend of the girl's family, came here at the urgent request of her widowed mother to assist in the search. The girl left home last Thursday. The railroad man had heard that she had been seen in the company of a Mrs. Davis, of the Duplain called on Mrs. Florence Davis of West Third street Friday evening but she knew nothing about the missing girl.

Later the police were told that a young girl unaccompanied had boarded an eastbound N. & W. train.

WHEN ATTY. R. C. MEYERS MET MARTYRED GOVERNOR

The unveiling of the William Goebel monument at Frankfort, Ky., Thursday recalled to Attorney R. C. Meyers' mind the only time he ever came in personal contact with the martyred governor of that state.

Mr. Meyers represented Greenup county in the legislature in 1895 and as chairman of the Republican house caucus more or less incurred the enmity of the Democratic members. He had introduced an amendment to the law providing for the township trustees to collect school taxes. The law had become unpopular, many officials neglecting to collect the tax and Mr. Meyers' amendment was to make it a part of the sheriff's duty to make the collections where township trustees were failing to act. To his surprise the amendment carried the house without a dissenting vote. But it was in the senate that he expected to strike a snag. It so happened that a few days later he met Goebel in the gallery between the senate and house. Greeting him pleasantly, Goebel broached the subject of his measure expressing a desire to have it pass the senate. He started to explain it in detail when quickly interrupted by the senator who said he was perfectly familiar with its provisions and gave his word that it would pass the senate. And Goebel kept his word the measure passing the senate with but one vote registered against it. "That incident convinced me," said the local attorney, "that Goebel was a man of few words but full of action."

THE GREAT ROOT JUICE IS HERE

It Is Predicted That Many Will Call at Wurster's Drug Store During the Demonstration.

The Root Juice demonstration started at Wurster Bros' drug store today. The scientist said: "I earnestly hope that Root Juice will do as much good in Portsmouth as it has at Fort Wayne and other points. It is easy to say a remedy will cure certain troubles, but we have positive proofs that Root Juice will cure rheumatism, indigestion, catarrh of the stomach, constipation, nervous weakness and most of the kidney complaints. It cures by removing or destroying germs that often infect the body and weaken and disorganize the digestive made."

Steinkamp Pleased Over Business Here

Mr. A. Steinkamp, of the big firm of A. Steinkamp & Co., came up from Cincinnati Thursday and remained here over Friday in the interest of his local store. Mr. Steinkamp said to a Times man that he was very much pleased, indeed, with the business of the Portsmouth store under the management of Mr. Harry A. Keef, who took hold a few months ago. Mr. Keef is a hard worker and a hustler, and Mr. Steinkamp said that the business here for the months of December and January far exceeded that of the same months heretofore.

Mr. Steinkamp says that general trade conditions are good and in anticipation of a largely increased trade he expects to increase the stock in the Portsmouth store to a large extent.

ORDER OUT TO SHOOT DOGS

Chief Davidson issued orders to the police Saturday to shoot any and all vicious dogs caught on the streets without muzzles.

The order was prompted by renewed complaints received from various parts of the city about dogs attacking children. Capt. W. A. McQuinn of the East End fire company and a friend, were also attacked by a vicious bull dog on upper Gallia street Friday evening.

Did Not Meet.

The board of control expected to hold a meeting Friday afternoon but postponed it on account of the death of Capt. Billy Williams, who was the foster father of Service Director John Jones.

SELBY'S BRANCH IS PROSPERING

The Ashland Commercial prints very large it passes through at least an interview with H. G. Penwarden, 50 different operations before it is manager of the Selby Shoe Co. ready to be sold and heeled.

Over 200 pairs were finished and he says the branch is meeting expectations. Sixty-five girls are now employed at wages ranging from $1 day to $12 per week.

No cutting is done in the Ashland factory. All this is done at Portsmouth and sent here where it is put together. One who is not acquainted with the manufacturing of shoes would think there is but little to do in sewing the uppers of a shoe together, but after the pattern is cut out and reaches the local fac-

SOFT DRINK MEN HIT BY ASHLAND COUNCIL

Ashland, Ky., Feb. 5.—With council (led, 4 to 3, and Mayor Moore casting the deciding vote in the affirmative, the Ashland city council passed a drastic soft drink ordinance Thursday night. The ordinance prohibits the soft drink dealers from selling anything of an intoxicating nature, and imposing a license tax of $250 on dealers in soft drinks not drawn from a soda fountain. On soda fountains a license tax of $12.50 is imposed. It is also ordered that all screens and other obstructions tending to break from public view be removed from said soft drink establishments, and that they be required to close their places of business at 12 o'clock p. m. each day and open not earlier than 4 a. m. and Saturday nights from 10 p. m. to 4 a. m. Monday.

It is also provided that an inspector be named whose duty it shall be to examine any drink found in said soft drink establishments and have same analyzed to determine if it contains anything of an intoxicating nature.

Upon conviction of any one dealing in any drink of an intoxicating nature a fine of $100 is provided with a jail sentence not exceeding twenty days.

Councilman Henderson made a good talk in support of his bill, stating that it was not a question of wet and dry with him but simply a matter of law enforcement. He said: "It is high time that we awake to the fact that lawlessness in our town is getting worse; that our citizens stand for good laws and enforcement, stand for sobriety and economy and law enforcement."

Sympathy For Henderson

The conviction of Tom Henderson and the possibility of a workhouse sentence, have aroused much sympathy for him among his West Side friends and acquaintances. Dozens offered to come to "Post-Ten" Tom's aid before allowing him to take a trip to the workhouse.

DREW AUTO TO BE A DANDY

Automobile Dealer Will J. Friel, who has sold a New Model 50-horse power Thomas Flyer to Irving Drew, has received word that it will be shipped March first. The machine is fitted at $2500, and this year's model is one of the handomest ever put out by the Thomas people.

Kenova Items Of Interest

From the Kenova news in the Huntington Advertiser, the following are of interest:

Amos Mays has resigned his position as shipping clerk at the freight depot and will probably accept a more lucrative position with the N. & W. at some other point.

S. Winter, an N. & W. employee, is confined to his home with an attack of fever.

Is Improving.

Frank Kettley, who recently met with an accident at his home on Munn's Run, is reported slowly improving.

FALLING HAIR Many People Have a Simple Way of Stopping It.

It was Dr. Sangreboni, of Paris, who first discovered that dandruff and falling hair were caused by a microbe.

And now that Parian Sage, the remedy that kills the dandruff germ, is sold in every town in America, the clean people of this country have ascertained to the fact that dandruff is unnecessary; that falling hair and itching scalp can be quickly stopped, and that people who use Parian Sage will never have dandruff.

To every reader of this paper who wishes to eradicate dandruff and stop falling hair, and have an abundant supply of hair, and free from itching, we have this offer: Parian Sage is sold by druggists everywhere, for 50 cents a large bottle. It is an absolutely pure, refined hair dressing, free from grease and sticky substances, and will cause hair to grow luxuriantly and prevent bald and guaranteed by Warner Bros.

MILLIONS OF LIVES LOST

An Awful Toll Collected by Consumption. Many Unnecessary Deaths from this Disease.

If people could only understand that systemic catarrh is an internal disease that external applications cannot cure, they would not need to be warned so often about this malady, which, when neglected, proves the way oftentimes for consumption, at the cost of millions of lives every year. Yet catarrh may be cured, if the right treatment is employed.

Catarrh is caused by a general diseased state of the system which leads commonly to annoying and perhaps serious local conditions, which may prove a fertile breeding ground for germs of consumption. External remedies give but temporary ease.

The only way to successfully treat catarrh is by employing a medicine which is absorbed and carried by the blood to all parts of the system, so that the mucous membrane or internal lining of the body is toned up and made capable of resisting the infection of consumption and other diseases.

We have a remedy prepared from the prescription of a physician who for thirty years studied and made catarrh a specialty, and whose record was a patient restored to health in every case where his treatment was followed as prescribed. That remedy is Rekall Muc-Tone. We are so positive that it will completely overcome catarrh in all its various forms, whether acute or chronic, that we promise to return every penny paid us for the medicine in every case where it fails or for any reason does not satisfy the user.

We want you to try Rekall Muc-Tone on our recommendation and guarantee. We are right here where you live, and you do not contract any obligation or risk when you try Rekall Muc-Tone on our guarantee.

We have Rekall Muc-Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Very often the taking of one 50-cent bottle is sufficient to make a marked impression upon the case. Of course in chronic cases a larger treatment is necessary. The average in such instances is three $1.00 bottles.

Remember you can get Rekall Muc-Tone in Portsmouth with only a few cents. The Rekall Store, Warsaw, Pa., 100 Chillicothe street, Portsmouth, O.

ART BURNED THE WIND

Art E. Martin, of the C. & O. city ticket office, had the story of his life, the other night, and a Kenhall ave. friend were leisurely strolling down a street in gaze upon the moon in waters of the Ohio when from out of the darkness emerged two big men. Mistaking them for highwaymen Art took to his heels and in his excitement forgot all about his companion. They met again though some distance away but had hardly recovered from the scare when the supposed highwaymen again stole upon them. Art fairly burned the wind in the direction of the city, and his legs too frightened to begin any inquiries about the person he left behind him.

TAKEN BACK TO LANCASTER

Charles Schofield, one of the Columbus boys, returned here ten days ago, was taken to the Lancaster Reformatory school by Police Officer Theobald Saturday. He is returned to that institution because he has been riding freight trains over the state. His companion, Howard Mack, will be released as he is above the age limit of the Lancaster school. Police will endeavor to secure employment for him or send him back to Columbus.

CLASS IS TO ENTER BIG CONTEST

On Sunday morning at Sunday school in the First Christian church, Rev. Mr. Meacham, the superintendent, will have on exhibition a large picture of the "Brethren Bible Class" of the Christian church in Nelsonville, Ohio. This is the largest men's class in any Sunday school in Ohio and they have challenged the Brotherhood class here to a contest. Every man in town, not enrolled elsewhere, is urged to visit and become a member of the Brotherhood Bible class of the First Christian church. Their expressive motto "Each the Other's Friend" is a beautiful reality in this class. The men's chorus of thirty voices will furnish the music for the church on Sunday night.

Lenten Rules To Be Read

HAIR WHITE AS SNOW

Restored to Natural Color with One Bottle of WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER

The Only True Hair Restorer, Tonic and Rejuvenator

ALMOST A MIRACLE

My hair was as white as snow when I commenced using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Restorer. One bottle restored my hair to its natural dark brown color. As I am now 70 years old, I consider the result most remarkable. It is an agreeable and refreshing hair dressing, keeping the hair soft and glossy, without being in the least greasy or sticky.

WM. WESTLAKE,
210 West Main Street, Rochester, N. Y.

Why hesitate when WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER is daily producing just such results?

After years of study and analysis of the hair, we have been able to produce an ideal Hair Tonic and Restorer, which contains an actual constituent of hair, combined with ingredients of recognized merit for treatment of hair and scalp diseases. It makes and keeps the scalp clean and healthy, gives life, strength and lustre to the hair, and restores faded and gray hair to natural color.

No matter how long and thick your hair is, WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER will make it longer and thicker. It will remove every trace of dandruff in a few days, stop falling in one week, and start a new growth in from one to three months.

These are facts that have been proven in scores of cases. WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER is guaranteed to do all that it is claimed to do or the price will be refunded.

ALL KIDNEY AND BLADDER MISERY GOES

Hundreds of folks here are needlessly miserable and worried because of out-of-order kidneys, backache or bladder trouble.

If you will take several doses of Pape's Diuretic, all misery from a lame back, rheumatism, painful stitches, indurated or swollen eyelids, nervous headache, irritability, dizziness, worn-out, sick feeling and other symptoms of overworked or deranged kidneys will vanish.

Uncontrollable, smarting, frequent urination (especially at night) and all bladder misery ends.

This unusual preparation goes at once to the disordered kidneys, bladder and urinary system, and distributes its healing, cleansing and vitalizing influence directly upon the organs and glands affected, and completes the cure before you realize it.

The moment you suspect any kidney or urinary disorder, or feel rheumatism coming, begin taking this harmless medicine, with the knowledge that there is no other remedy, at any price, made anywhere else in the world, which will effect so thorough and prompt a cure as a 50-cent treatment of Pape's Diuretic, which any druggist can supply.

Your physician, pharmacist, banker or any mercantile agency will tell you that Pape, Thompson & Pape, of Cincinnati, is a large and responsible medicine concern, thoroughly worthy of your confidence.

Only curative results can come from taking Pape's Diuretic, and a few days' treatment means clean, active, healthy kidneys, bladder and urinary organs—and you feel fine.

Accept only Pape's Diuretic, fifty-cent treatment—any drug store—anywhere in the world.

Collie Dog Disappears

Police were notified Saturday morning of the disappearance of "Max," a white and yellow Scotch collie pup belonging to Irving Drew.

Adam Pfau Was Not Sued

In an item in the court column of Friday's Times, it was stated that a civil suit of George Luther against Adam Pfau over a disputed account was partially heard by the court. An error was made in that the defendant was Jacob Pfau and not Adam Pfau. Adam Pfau, in the years he has lived here, has never had a law suit of any kind and what is more says he never intends to have one, if he knows himself.

The item was a small one but Adam says he guesses every one in town must have seen it, judging from the inquiries made of him about "the case."

REV. MEACHAM GOT NEAT SUM FOR CHURCH

E. J. Meacham, pastor of First Christian church, returned from Athens, O., yesterday. He closed a most successful revival meeting there on Wednesday night and on Thursday night gave his lecture on "Talk and Talkers" to a large audience. The part of the proceeds he received amounting to $51.50 was donated to the Christian church here to apply on their heavy debt. Mr. Meacham was greatly pleased with Athens and her people.

SAGE FOR DARKENING THE HAIR.

There is nothing new about the idea of using sage for restoring the color of the hair. Our great-grandmothers kept their locks soft, dark and glossy by using a "sage tea." Whenever their hair fell out or took on a dull, faded appearance, they made a decoction of sage leaves and applied it to their hair with wonderful beneficial effect. Nowadays we don't have to wait for the old-time, tedious method of using the herbs and making the tea. This is done by skillful chemists so that we could do it ourselves and all we have to do is to use the ready-made product. Woods' Sage and Sulphur, containing the proper strength with the addition of Sulphur, another old-time remedy. This preparation is sold in all first-class druggists for 50c, and $1.00 a bottle, or is sent direct by the Woods Chemical Company, 74 West 12th St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

For sale and recommended by Foster & Stretch Pharmacy.

Ready For Work On New Depot

Active work on the new R. & O. S. W. freight and storage house at Third and Market streets was commenced Saturday morning with the unloading of cars containing building material.

A force of over fifty men will be put to work Monday excavating for the foundations. The city public safety department has been appealed to for men and all applicants for relief who chance to be able-bodied men are advised to visit the R. & O. S. W. office.

Purchases Fine Horses

Attorney Ed Miller and brother, Abe, returned Friday from a swing around the state. At Washington, C. H. Ed purchased a fine match team of draft horses for his Washington farm. The steeds are bays in color matching perfectly, weigh 1700 pounds each and one of the handsomest teams ever seen in southern Ohio.

Thinks It Was False Alarm

City health authorities were notified by phone Friday evening by N. & W. officials that a negro laborer had taken sick in one of the construction camps east of the city, and it was thought he was suffering from smallpox.

Health Officer Dr. Ray immediately went to the camps and made a thorough investigation, but failed to find anyone at all sick. The physician has come to the conclusion that it was a false alarm.

MY DOCTOR MIGHTY FINE

Mrs. Hattie Cain of Carrsville Thinks all the More of Her Doctor Since He Advised Her to Take Cardui.

Carrsville, Ky.—"My doctor," writes Mrs. Hattie Cain, "who advised me to take Cardui for my troubles, is a mighty fine doctor, and I say Cardui is Cardui and the people who make it."

"Before I took Cardui, I suffered with terrible troubles for sixteen years. I would have to send for a doctor every three months, and oh how dreadfully I suffered."

"I would camp and have convulsions and it looked like I would die. At last I took Cardui and oh what a surprise I found it was the medicine for me!"

"From the first bottle, I began to mend and now I am well, can do more work, can walk and go where I please and I don't hurt me, and I owe it all to Cardui. Cardui helps sick women back to health. It has been doing this for over 30 years. It is a real medicine, or a heart medicine."

If you are a woman, try it.

Food For Reflection

When you stop to consider, the business of Banking, to be really successful, must be conducted on conservative and sane lines. The loans must be selected as though one's own money was at stake. No matter how strong is the organization of a bank, how complete and elegant fittings, its best claim for business is an unquestioned security. That is the foundation principle of this bank.

A MAN'S RING

In a man's set ring the gem should be of fine quality and the mounting should be massive, yet well proportioned. Our men's rings are handsome, well made, eminently fashioned to make the set appear at its full value. The Amethyst, a deep, royal purple colored stone is the birth stone for February. We have provided an unusual selection of gentlemen's set rings, among which the Amethyst is quite prominent. We believe that the beauty of our Amethyst Men's rings will be a surprise even to those who are well acquainted with the uniform excellence of our jewelry.

SHORT REVIEW OF THE TRAVELING SALESMAN

On every subject there are said to be two opinions; we have one in mind right now on which there are at least three. That subject, one you hear discussed wherever you go, home, factory, store, or street corner, is the much exploited "The Traveling Salesman" which appeared at the Grand Friday twice before packed houses.

Estimations of it runs from fine to good, indifferent and bad. We have listened to all the expressions and have reached the conclusion that in the main they are spoken of what was expected rather than of what was seen and heard.

By one of those peculiar fancies, which sometimes possesses the public mind, expectation as to "The Traveling Salesman" was overwrought. It is not a powerful problem play, it is not a thriller, it is just a bright, breezy comedy, with many a merry quip and jest to bring unrestrained laughter and a touch of pathos here and there to bring moisture to the eye, brightened immediately by shifting ludicrousness, or exaggeration, which make the charm and romance of the drummer's life. In this spirit it was interpreted by a capable company. Easily the star of the play was the leading man, Austin Webb, as Bob Blake. He gave his part a trifle of over-exaggeration, but he was the handsome, generous, rollicking, warm-hearted drummer, boon friend of all the boys on the road and the more the audience saw of him the more it liked him. He was the chief factor in bringing the curtain up several times in obedience to the tumultuous call of applause. His opposite Miss and sweetheart, on sight, Miss Rosalind Coughlin, is pretty, a pleasing actress and as the station telegraph operator Beth Elliott was attractive in her naturalness. Scott Higgins, as the wholesale merchant, Martin Drury, chief villain of the plot, gave that cast of the intensely dramatic that some people love so much and he was skillfully aided in this by his clerk, Frank Lynn Royce, portrayed and that word is to be taken in full significance, by Scott Higgins. The feature of the play is the poker game scene. Here Blake appears, elated at his best and surrounded by Ben Cobb, John Kimball and Ted

Watts, served by "Julius," the negro, there was realistic display of various types of drummers and a diversion in which many of them find solace from the worries of their occupation. We would like to say a good and deserved word individually for all his support here but space is not at command.

Lon Haley Dies Today

After bravely struggling against the ravages of tuberculosis for over two years, Monroe Haley, of Fifth street, died Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. He was a brother of William Haley, who has a liquor store in the Turkey building. It will be remembered that Haley was a member of the old Mazzetta quartette which used to delight Portsmouth with their beautiful melodies.

The members of this quartette were Monroe Haley, John George, Will Shumaker and Henry Brown. Time has played havoc with the quartette, and today there is only one member of the old Mazzetta quartette living, John George.

Mr. Haley was a member of Pleasant Green Baptist church. He was survived by his father and mother, the Rev. Albert Haley and wife, his brother, William Haley, his wife and two children, Grace and Louise.

The funeral will be held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Pleasant Green Baptist church. Rev. Norris will officiate.

County Treasurer Is Again Enjoined

Efforts of the county treasurer to hold property owners responsible for Daw tax caused another injunction suit to be filed by Attorneys Holcomb & Millar Saturday.

The suit is brought by Mrs. Catherine Hubert, wife of Dr. E. W. Hubert, a well known colored physician. Mrs. Hubert is owner of the old "Dead Fall" property at the southeast corner of Eleventh and Gay streets. The place was occupied by James Price as a soft drink parlor last September. On the 9th day of that month it was raided on a warrant sworn to by John T. Breese. The goods confiscated though did not prove to be contraband and Price was never tried or convicted. He moved out shortly afterward. Despite these facts the treasurer has assessed the sum of $552 against Mrs. Hubert as the property owner for Daw tax and $110 addition for penalty.

How to Apply the Design

Do not rest your hand or fingers upon any part of the design you are transferring, else the imprint of hand or fingers will be as distinct upon the material as the drawn lines of the design.

For bureau and curtains the openings may be drawn across the width, either throughout the entire surface or in a broad border. For the bedspread a barred effect will be more satisfactory.

THE Englebar raffia on the last French possessions and on the papayan plantations are no longer available, gathered to the breeding which follows them to the government. This is irregularly substituted for the old matters. They are sold regularly in small plants and, again, in pairs and since the plants are very similar the difference required only the usual amount of attention and very little care. The material is never necessary three times round the space.

Madras is the best city for the pilgrim. To methods of fastening are to be learned and one decided. Never use buttons, for they wash down if you have any other fastener at hand. They are never lost and, almost worse, they wear the fabric when the iron passes over them, the last of the hanes of the great hairnets.

Buttons with small buttonholes are a very good idea, but not so advisable as the use of the buttoned cord. The use of buttons of the hairnet is the only one of the most, any change of size is a washing in which the top must be pulled off and replaced on the next day.

Is the simplest method, merely applying the bandage over the wound, secured from it to hold it down.

Another easy device is the elastic which is fastened to the corners of the cloth.

To draw the giraffe material together some distance above its tail end to allow it to fall into a nestle of shirred hair and with cotton. Sometimes the spacing is so planned as to make the giraffe into many small tufts with eight bands of narrow cotton. Again, the giraffe may be made with a head and a tail, and the neck and legs of the giraffe may be made by pulling the shirred hair. The head is wrapped closely round the end for a distance of an inch or two, and the end tucked under and sewn to it.

AS is not the case with most varieties of home manufacturing, the craftsman is not in a better position to control the quality of his work than a certain skill and a willingness are required to do the desired task. In the case of the craftsman, the work and the correct lines are present at every given point in the skill; it is what he does with it that counts. Further, the craftsman should be capable of doing the work in a certain order, a certain form, which cannot be altered at his discretion according to his own whims. The craftsman is not a worker at random who knows no work at all, but a craftsman who attempts at a particular task and a particular way of doing it.

The simplest model is the most common.

[illegible]

More ornate are those models combining the tanks and pistons. The accordion-shaped pistons are usually decorated with the tank's name. The pistons are usually made twice the size of the tank's strips, and they will rotate in a clockwise direction. The pistons are placed in the tank's slots, and the strips are placed in the pistons' slots. The pistons are even numbered, and the strips are odd numbered. The pistons are numbered from the top of the tank, and the strips are numbered from the bottom of the tank. of a dirty farmer. All of the characters and many others almost as interesting are quarantined in the sanitarium by the county health authorities and the complications ensuing are original and amusing to an extraordinary degree.

At The Majestic.
The reports received by the management of the Majestic theatre on their "Headliner" Bobby Beach and company for the first half of the week certainly sounds good, as the Charleston papers say that clever little nidget and his company of five people fairly "knocked them off the seats" with their one act musical comedy at the Berlew opera house this week. Beside this feature the bill will include Fern Malrose, who is said to be one of the best singing comedienne on the Morris circuit. A sketch by Eddy and Tallman presenting their comedy creation "A Lesson in Cooking" an Irish laughing act of laugh acts and last but not least Clark Boynton's Dog Circus, of which too much can not be said as the almost human intelligence shown by these remarkable dogs have made them favorites wherever they have been shown. The pictures for the first half of the week will be very interesting and of the usual clear type that close the bill at the Majestic.

At The Orpheum.
Next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the offering will be out of the ordinary run of the bills that have been seen there of late, inasmuch as there will be but very little music or singing in the show. Novelty will take its place. The feature being the great Oloro troupe of Namba Wakahama Japs followed by the alpine McMan and Co. presenting the comedy playlet entitled "The High School Kids." Fred Welton will offer some things very novel in way of original entertainment. Spencer and Austin being the only number with singing, talking and whirlwind dancing, thus making a bill well balanced and with plenty of variety from start to finish to make a show of real merit and entertaining quality.

At Bigelow.
The Katherine Ridgeway Concern Company appears at Bigelow church next Monday evening, Feb. 7th as the fourth number on the Bigelow lecture course.
Miss Ridgeway is one of the best known and popular readers of the present generation and above gives the entire evening's concert with the assistance of one other artist, a pianist. Miss Ridgeway by birth is a southerner, a native of Atlanta, but spent most of her childhood in the far northwest. She has appeared in nearly every city in the United States and has been repeatedly and enthusiastically received and won phenomenal success. She furnishes a splendid entertainment and you should not fail to hear this talented young lady.

At the present time the theatres of this country are flooded with dramas that are highly sensational, and that carry readers to a disgusting degree. This is particularly noticeable in the latest productions in New York and other large cities, where four or five act dramas are produced each month. Enormous pressure in business and the high tension which the American public is constantly under have produced high tension dramas and put into them heart breaking situations until one wonders whether the future of the problem play, as the present day drama has come to be, is not extremely precarious.

However one thing is certain, and that is that the present strain cannot continue, for already the crowd is strained to the breaking point. There are two plays being produced in New York this month that are absolutely nerve racking, and it is said that no person with a weak heart should witness them. "The City" by Clyde Fitch, and "The Nigger" by Edward Sheldon, are plays made horrible than Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, and even outclass some of Ibsen's terrible productions.

Dramatic critics who have watched the stage for years say that never have they seen audiences so overtaxed as at the opening nights of these two plays. On the opening night of "The City," women rose in their seats and shrieked, and men gripped the sides of their chairs with clenched hands so thrilling was the acting.
"The City" is a story of a young man, George Rand, who after his father's death, goes to New York to make his fortune. He comes with him Hammett, a former employee of his father who is his half brother. Rand advances rapidly by the use of dishonest business methods, and is in line for nomination as governor. Hammett threatens to use his knowledge of Rand's methods if he is not permitted a fair berth. Hammett is a scoundrel and, and Rand has a quarrel with him while he is in a particularly ugly mood. The crisis comes when Rand learns that Gladys, his sister is in love with Hammett.

Then a secret is revealed. Rand is forced to tell Hammett that Gladys is his own sister. Hammett is under the influence of opium, and with a cry rushes at Rand, and refuses to give her up. Then Rand calls Gladys to tell her that she is Hammett's sister, but before he can say a word to her, Hammett pulls a pistol, and kills her. He then turns it on himself crying, "now you can never see me."
Rand seizes the pistol and tells Hammett that he will have to suffer the penalty of the chair. But the worst is yet to come. The power of the drug is passing away from Hammett, who falls at the feet of Rand, a miserable shrieking wretch, and begs to be allowed to kill himself. He begs his head upon the floor, and then threatens to expose Rand, if he will suffer for it, and he hurls the pistol through the window, while Hammett writhes on the floor.

The last act shows the regeneration of Rand, who gives back his dishonest earnings, and turns over a new leaf.

At least there is some good that has been done by this unending play, and that is that it has developed a second Mansfield. Mr. Tully Marshall, whose great work as the husband in "Paid in Full," has moved his audience by his realistic acting in this horrible piece, as no actor since Mansfield has done.

Adeline Gence, the premier dancer of the world, has announced that she is going to leave the stage and get married. The happy event is to take place next June, and Frank W. Ibit of New York is the lucky man. It will be recalled that Edith Barrymore announced her intention of leaving the stage before her marriage, but she is back on the stage again, the plate of the footlights having proven too tempting for her.

It remains to be seen whether Miss Gence can keep away from the footlights, or whether she, like Miss Barrymore, will finally return to her old love.

Miss Marie Dow is soon to appear in a new play by William Gillette, after her engagement in London is terminated.

The last part of January has seen many notable figures in the stage world pass out of existence. Joseph Whelock Jr., died in Phoenix, Arizona on Jan. 22nd from tuberculosis. His debut as a star was at New Haven, Conn. on Sept. 27, 1895, in George Ade's "Just Out of College." His death was generally regretted in the theatrical world, as he was a favorite in the west.

Miss Lotta Faust, whose singing in the "Wizard of Oz," before Sir Thomas Lipton made her famous, died Jan. 25th at a private sanitarium in New York City. She played prominent roles in "The White Hen," "The Girl Behind The Counter," "The Mimic World," and her last engagement, "The Midnight Sun."

The $100,000 suit of R. S. Salter, known among theatrical people as Frances Lee, against Oscar Hammerstein, has been settled out of court. The case was called for trial on Jan. 26, after several adjournments in the Supreme Court, before Justice Gierach, and ended for both parties unannounced that the claim had been adjusted.

Harvard University produced "The Faith Healer," by William Vaughn Moody on Jan. 24th. The leading parts were taken by Mr. Henry Miller and company.

William Faversham will star in a new play, "The House of Temperance," to hold the attention. The Greek in the close of his season in plays alone have made a success of this. The play is written by Gene of this.

While the valuable fingers of two celebrated musicians have been injured against accident for big sums of money—Paderewski's for $125,000 and those of Mischa Elman, the wonderful boy violinist, for $50,000—It remains for Ruth St. Denis, the wonderful dancer, to insure, not her feet, as might be expected of a dancer, but her arms.

In the dancer's wonderful Hindu Terpsichorean gyrations her beautifully graceful arms are more in evidence than her feet. As this business manager has made a number of contracts for Miss St. Denis' appearance in his cities other than New York, and as these contracts contain a forfeiture clause in case the dancer does not appear, he has shown the astuteness of a practical business man in securing this insurance, which is with a big London company.

John Drew, the actor, was one of those who appeared before the Tax Board on Jan. 25th to swear off their personal taxes. He was assessed on $25,000, but declared that he is a legal resident of Southampton, L. I.

Charles Emerson Cook, theatrical agent, who for a long time was David Belasco's general press agent, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities $12,000 and assets, consisting of cash in bank $40 and two shares of stock of the Charles Emerson Cook Theatrical Co., par value $200.

Governor Harmon of Ohio, who formerly opened the Rhode Royal Circus in Columbus on Jan. 21, was presented with a solid gold whistle, inscribed, by Nellie Carroll, after an introduction by Mayor George Marshall.

The performers were made aware before the performance that they were showing before the governor of the State, and many of them came forward after their acts and shook hands with him.

It is stated in a communication received from St. Paul, Minn., that William Morris will open a new vaudeville theatre in that city, and run it in connection with the Mik's Theatre in New York, in "The Inferior Sex."

No doubt this is due to the fact that "The Inferior Sex" has been playing to packed houses, and the management do not care to let go of a good thing.

The Ben Greet players are to fill a ten weeks' engagement at the Garden Theatre in New York City commencing Feb. 14th.

This company has made itself famous by going back to the old idea which was in vogue in the time of Shakespeare, namely, that of producing plays without scenery, but depending on great artistic ability in the use of the scenery, and last week a contract was signed by which they secured control of the New York Theatre, at St. John and O'Farrell streets.

The opening attraction will be Florence Roberts, who begins a month's engagement on Feb. 14th. If she has a successful season the St. John shows will be continued there, with many new plays and old ones which were announced for the Valencia.

JEFF AND JACK TO PUT UP HARD FIGHT

To cut this story short, read what I allow me to say that if Jeff can win a fast fight for 10 rounds, I don't believe Lin Artha won't wake up after it the morning after. The fight is going to be a long drawn-out affair, and I doubt if it goes over 10 rounds, for when two such brawny giants face each other in the ring, with the world's championship and a purse of $101,000 at stake, something is going to give way in a hurry. It will be a fight worth going under the sea, for, without doubt, the two contestants are the world's greatest gladiators now bawling around the ropes of a ring.

BEE-HUNTING

By Anne and Bannister Merwin

JOHNSTONE frowned intently, as he adjusted to his shoulders the bamboo frames with their squares of scarlet silk.

He stood upon a rise of ground in a big field. Intertwined and dappled spread a white-and-gold pattern over the thick green grass. There was a scent of red clover; and bees, at their self-appointed task, twanged like tiny violins.

But Johnstone was not bothering himself much with the picturesqueness of the spot. A stone-throw distance, rose a hillock, and beyond it lay another field shut off at its farther side by a high hedge.

"I believe I can make the hedge to-day," he said to himself.

"Here goes!" He ran swiftly along the top of his knoll, cleared the end of it with a long jump and pided off into space.

Like a huge tropical bird he sped through the air to the second knoll. He felt his feet swish through the high grass, and he chuckled as the machine kept up its speed.

Half-way across the second field the summer breeze died down, the impetus of the aeroplane slackened. Then the hedge approached. Johnstone raised the front planes a bit, the wings lifted in a last spurt, and he topped the highest bit of the hedge, giving it a tremendous kick as he passed over, and the scarlet wings sunk gently to earth, depositing Johnstone at the feet of a little brown creature who dropped a pair of opera-glasses and stared disbelievingly.

"I beg your pardon," said Johnstone.

"I was looking for a bee," said the girl.

"Must have frightened you," went on Johnstone, and reached for her opera-glasses.

"Thank you," said the girl, taking them. "Are you—are you on your way—anywhere?"

"I have arrived," replied Johnstone. "I go a little farther each day. To-day I tried to make the hedge."

The girl had been staring at him. Her brown eyes were big and solemn, like a frightened child's.

Suddenly she jerked her head back, buried her face in her hands and rocked to and fro.

"I have frightened you half to death," cried Johnstone, remorsefully.

He tugged at the straps that held his wings, but the girl looked up and waved at him a small protesting hand.

"Don't, please don't take them off," she begged chokingly. "I'll not laugh and more." She searched for her handkerchief. "Please keep them on. It wasn't really funny, only I'd never seen any before—close to. They're lovely! And it's such a nice way to go about, isn't it?"

She rose, wiping her eyes. Johnstone now had the planes off; they were lying, two big stretches of scarlet, on the ground. The girl pointed toward them.

"Oh, would you, will you please let me try them?" She raised an adorable little face to Johnstone, who hardened his heart and looked upon her coldly.

"Certainly not!" he said.

No woman might laugh at Johnstone with impunity. "You are angry," said this suddenly soft-eyed, be-seeing person. "And I don't blame you. But I was looking for a bee—her mouth quivered again.

"A bee?" questioned Johnstone.

"Yes, I am bee-hunting. But what are bees compared to flying-machines?"

"Bees are flying-machines," argued Johnstone.

"Oh, yes, of course. And you are sure, quite sure?" As she asked the question she nodded her brown head toward the scarlet wings on the ground.

"Yes, quite sure," replied Johnstone, very decidedly.

The girl sighed, then walked a few steps away and picked up a brown box from the grass. She looked around vaguely.

"I must have dropped the opera-glasses again," she said. "I'm always losing them. They're father's."

Johnstone returned them to her for the second time. She smiled at him.

"I shall tell father that I have seen an aeroplane and a man flying it," she said. "He will be interested. Good morning."

"What is the box for?" asked Johnstone.

"There is honey in it. A lot of honey in, and then out again. You follow the bees. Good morning."

"That is where you need the wings," said Johnstone, reliving to a smile.

"They would be convenient," admitted the girl. "But one can walk after a bee very easily. When you lose him, you wait a little—and always another bee appears."

She looked at Johnstone speculatively.

"Good-by," she said again.

"How far do you follow them?"

"It depends."

"On what?"

The girl sank down on the soft grass again, and laid aside her box.

"You must know," she explained patiently, "that bees store their honey in a tree."

"Not in hives?" asked Johnstone. "I thought—"

"Wild bees," still with an air of patience. "Then you find the tree and cut it down."

"A simple and natural process," commented Johnstone. "An ancestral oak for a couple of dollars' worth of honey!"

The girl rose to her feet.

"It isn't such an exciting sport as flying," she said, "but, after all, no one hits the bee, and one can always use the ancestral oak in one's ancestral fireplace."

Her sunburned, freckled face looked pleasantly at Johnstone. A filled sunbonnet hung at her neck, and her brown-checked gingham dress was open a bit at the throat. She held the cigar-box carefully under one (tanned) half-bare arm; the abused glasses hung carelessly from slim brown fingers.

Of a sudden it seemed to Johnstone, inventor by choice, and professor of mathematics by education, that a personally conducted bee hunt was the one thing he craved.

He remarked with diffidence, "If you're quite sure I won't be in your way," he paused.

The girl looked startled for a moment. Then her solemn eyes—eyes that belied the mobile mouth—took on a soft shining.

"Of course, there's really no reason why you should be in my way. The fields are wide enough, there are plenty of clover-beds. In fact, I go for the bees."

"You know I mean why I go with you?" he said.

The brown little face flushed under its tan, but she looked gallantly into Johnstone's face.

"Why not?" she asked.

"Let me take the cigar-box," said Johnstone.

"Perhaps it had better be the opera-glasses," returned the girl.

On a shaded knoll they rested after a time. The cigar-box with its reflective contents was set to lure some passing bee into its depths. But the bees' drinking was a mild, uninteresting business, and several bees had their full whiff of the honey and went on.

"And you really enjoy it? I've improved on an old idea. I think in time I'll get it to be practical."

"I'm sure you will. And you're really the man who lives in that dear little trolley-car house? Father and I have often wondered who had had the ingenuity to make use of that stranded car. It must be very delightful to do what you want to do. Now, I can never do more than I want to do, or, if I can, it is only for a very short time."

"Poor child!" thought Johnstone, "she longs to live in town, I suppose. In town where she'd lose all this simplicity, this remarkable attractiveness, this—"

"Not that I want to live in a trolley-car," laughed the girl.

"I should say not," cried Johnstone.

"Like a bird's song," she zipping water, like—

"What do you want to do?" he asked earnestly.

She looked, it may be a trifle anxiously, at Johnstone. His tone was unexpected.

"There goes a bee!" and Johnstone found himself on his feet, watching anxiously for two big brown eyes that were hidden from him behind opera-glasses.

"Don't say you want to go to town, where you would be spoiled," he found himself protesting.

"I won't say it," sighed the girl, her eyes still hidden.

"I'm almost quite contented—at the lodge."

So she was the lodge-keeper's daughter.

"It is a lovely little place," assented Johnstone warmly.

"It is," agreed the girl. "Sometimes I think I ought never to want anything different. The bee went in that direction." She pulled the sunbonnet over her head, and started across the field. Johnstone walked beside her.

"Of course, you have your books in winter," said he.

"I have my books now," said the soft voice.

"What are they—may I ask?"

"Cook-books, mostly."

"What are they—may I ask?"

"Cook-books, mostly."

Johnstone tried to see her face, but the frill of the lars and polished shoes? All gone. Fused and melted into the glorious happiness of walking through Elysian fields, with brown eyes that glanced from under the pink frill of a sunbonnet, with a wonderful mouth that curved into smiles with a little slim figure that floated along on white canvas-shod feet that scarcely crushed the grass beneath them.

Many times they stopped, losing the trail; for the flight of the bee is not easy to follow. The little brown honey-bearers spiraled upward, paused in air, then shot away—diminishing dots against the blue.

Into the woods they wandered. Her gaze was upward, among the higher trees and trunks. But Johnstone had no eyes for the bees; he watched the sweet, upturned face, and touched her arm gently to guide her when her steps were threatened by the roughness of their untrodden way.

Presently they heard a faint humming. They were at the base of a great gnarled trunk, a huge tree, a very monarch of the woods.

"This is our tree," said the girl; "see!" She pointed to a hole, twenty feet above them. Through a hole in the trunk busy little workers were passing in and out. Then she looked at him, and her face sobered.

"It is an ancestral oak," she said softly.

"Yes," he replied, "an ancestral oak. Ten centuries of lineage there, and the bees store their sweets in its crown."

"We mustn't cut it down."

"It's on the estate of a pretty important person," remarked Johnstone.

The girl's eyes dropped for a second, but came again bravely to his.

"What if we do not know each other—by name?" he went on. "I can say to you, I am a teacher of mathematics—for my living, an inventor—from love of it. I am, I repeat, the girl, what does all that matter? You are you and I am I—and we have met!"

"We have met," murmured the girl.

"You are the lodge-keeper's daughter, sweet, true, pure as one of God's angels. I know it. Can't I see? Haven't I eyes, oh little girl?"

He dropped on one knee beside her and took her unresisting hand in his.

"I had heard that such things had happened to others," he whispered.

The girl put her hand to her throat, and a sob shook her.

"I have never believed in love coming like this—till now," he said.

Then a trembling went over her whole body, and her head dropped, but he heard a faint answering whisper—"Till now."

He kissed her hand and laid it gently on her knee. Everything was still except the grave old oak, which rustled softly. And after a time she lifted her face, and long slow looks took each other's eyes. Then she placed two cold little hands in his.

There was a small ledge along the road from the ancestral oak; their oak of betrothal, Johnstone called it.

Around the corner of the lodge and into their Eden came a tall, burly man. He called out to the girl: "Where in the devil have you been, Alice? Lord Selden's over at the lodge raising merry Cain because you didn't meet him. Roberts just telephoned me you were here."

"I have decided not to marry Lord Selden, father."

"The deuce you have!"

The tall, burly man groped for his glasses, settled them on his nose.

"What's all this nonsense?" he began. "Who what—why, it's Professor Johnstone!"

"It is," said Johnstone.

"Is it?" asked Alice.

"I am glad to meet you," said the man eagerly.

"I'm decidedly interested in that machine of yours. Gretton was telling me that you were doing wonders with it."

"I have done wonders with it," said Johnstone. "I don't know as you can believe me, but I have fallen at the feet of your daughter."

"Every one does that," said the man, as if dismissing the subject. "Run along and see Selden now. Alice—that's a good child. I want to talk with the professor about those planes. Can you tell me, sir, if the amount of air displaced exceeds the weight—"

"But I love your daughter!" and Johnstone raised her hand and kissed it. It had its result.

"Here, here, sir, that's carrying things too far. She's a young lady, Mr. Johnstone, for all she looks like a little girl. More than that, she's as good as engaged to Lord Selden, who is cooling his heels on the lodge porch down at the big gate. Run along, I tell you, Alice."

But Alice, moving deliberately, raised her bare brown arm and laid them about Johnstone's neck. Then she kissed him softly on the cheek, and looked around over her shoulder at her father.

"There!" she said.

"Alice!"

The glasses fell from her father's startled eyes.

"Alice, my little girl!"

Then she was in her father's arms, and the tears that wet her cheeks wet his also.

He sat down in the reed chair, and held her like a baby.

"Forgive your stupid old daddy, darling. Tell me—don't be afraid of father—what has happened? I'll stand up for my girl against everybody—you know that—even against your mother!" He added this with a sort of groan.

So Johnstone told him.

And what he told him, added to and supplemented by the little creature in her father's arms, must have been satisfactory; for the father raised his daughter and said, rather ruefully, "Well, I suppose I've got to be the one to break it to Selden."

"It was mother's fault," said Alice. "She said I'd marry him. I never did. He came over here on the chance. You know that, father. Mother told him to come. I'm sure she did. When does she sail for home—the fifteenth?"

Her father nodded. She slipped from his lap.

"The fifteenth! And to-day is the fifteenth. There's no time to cable her." She sank back on her father's knee, and laughed.

"A lot can happen in a week," she said. Then she blushed violently.

Johnstone was beside her.

"Would you want her to marry a lord," he asked the burly man, "when you must know she'd be happy only with me?"

"I wouldn't," said the burly man promptly; "but I'm almost afraid her mother would."

"If we were married—now, right away—her mother couldn't," Johnstone spoke triumphantly.

"That's so," said Alice's father.

Roberts came out on the porch just then, Alice raised her voice and pointed a finger at her.

"You're a meddler," she called.

The old woman scowled at Johnstone.

"It's all right," said Alice's father.

Then the old woman spoke. With an injured air she addressed Johnstone.

"Mrs. Summersleigh gave me charge of Alice when she went abroad with Miss Alice's sister, the Countess of Danbury."

"Then Johnstone went white."

"You are Summersleigh?" he said to the burly man.

There was a silence. The burly man did not deny that he was Summersleigh, for he could not. So he only nodded and leaned back in his chair.

"It's a pretty place, Summersleigh," he said finally; "don't you like it?"

But Johnstone ignored the question. Then he said grimly, turning to Alice, "I am not going to let the fact that you are Alice Summersleigh interfere with our happiness. I have five thousand a year now—"

"And more soon," put in Alice.

"I started on less," commented Alice's father.

"But you said you lived at the lodge," objected Johnstone.

He did not like to think that Alice had deceived him.

"We do," interposed her father. "The house is being put in order."

"Ah!" said Johnstone in a satisfied tone.

"And I have got the cook-books—haven't I, daddy?"

"A whole stack of them; come down yesterday."

"There are to sell at the village fair," explained Alice.

"Ah!" said Johnstone again.

"I shall always tell you the truth," said Alice.

"Then tell me—" said Johnstone eagerly reaching for her hand.

Mrs. Roberts's face relaxed a little as she took her tray into the house, and Alice's father turned aside with a suspicion of a sob, for Alice had turned right before them both, and, forgetting every one but Johnstone had said quite solemnly:

"I do—I do love you."

"ARE YOU—ARE YOU ON YOUR WAY—ANYWHERE?"

sunbonnet flapped and blew in the soft breeze, giving only glimpses of an oval cheek, a small nose, and a bit of flying hair. He felt an uneasy stirring of his sympathies. It would be too bad to have this natural, simple child spoiled. On the other hand, to make a cow of her!

"It is well for a woman to know how to cook," he said, lightly.

The pink sunbonnet flashed around toward him, but he lost the scolding glance of subtly scornful eyes.

"Suppose we cut a bee," suggested the soft voice.

"No," objected Johnstone, swiftly. "No, I think I really ought to use your bee. You see I'm totally unacquainted with bees, and I'm rather near-sighted, too. Is that one?"—pointing to a big devil's darning-needle that, just then, swept by them.

"It is not!"

"Ah!" sighed Johnstone, "you see—"

"Yes," said the girl, "I see. Butterflies hovered over the tall grasses. In the woods at the edge of the field a hundred birds poured forth a riot of song. It was young summer and youth had met youth."

Where was the joy of invention? Where had the pleasures of differential calculus flown to? Where the delights of a trolley-car house and freedom from col-

"Is it?"

"You must know," he spoke reproachfully. "It's your own estate."

"My own estate?" a flash of a startled face.

"Didn't you tell me your father was the lodge-keeper?"

"Oh!" She looked critically about her. "Yet, of course, we are on the grounds. We seem to have come a long way. I think we'd better go back."

But Johnstone put out a detaining hand.

"No," he breathed, "no, let us rest here!"

She looked at him, coldly for a moment. But the touch of fear, if fear it was, vanished swiftly, and she sat down on a clump of moss.

Johnstone stood above her, leaning against the great tree.

There was silence, and yet the air seemed full of voices. Voices insistent, penetrating, in the man's ears; pleading, overpowering, in the girl's. A long time they remained so. Then, as if against her will, the girl's eyes lifted slowly—and looked into Johnstone's.

He broke the silence. He leaned toward her and spoke rapidly, earnestly.

"Listen," he said. "You do not know me, and I do not know you. But something strange, something wonderful, has come to us. I feel it, I know it. You—you must feel it, too."

"That's the little lodge," said the girl, as they neared the place. "I'm going ahead, and get Mrs. Roberts—that's the keeper—to give us some luncheon."

And when they came to the small lodge the girl ran ahead.

"I'll fix it up with her," she called back.

Johnstone, walking slowly up the steps of the little porch, heard the words, "Oh, Miss Alice," and then his little love came out and waited straight to him.

"We will have luncheon here," she said, with an old note of authority in her voice.

Johnstone thought how well it became her, and he seated her in a chair by a green porch table that had a bowl of wild flowers on it. A bee was humming above a yellow daisy.

"Where are the opera-glasses?" he asked the girl.

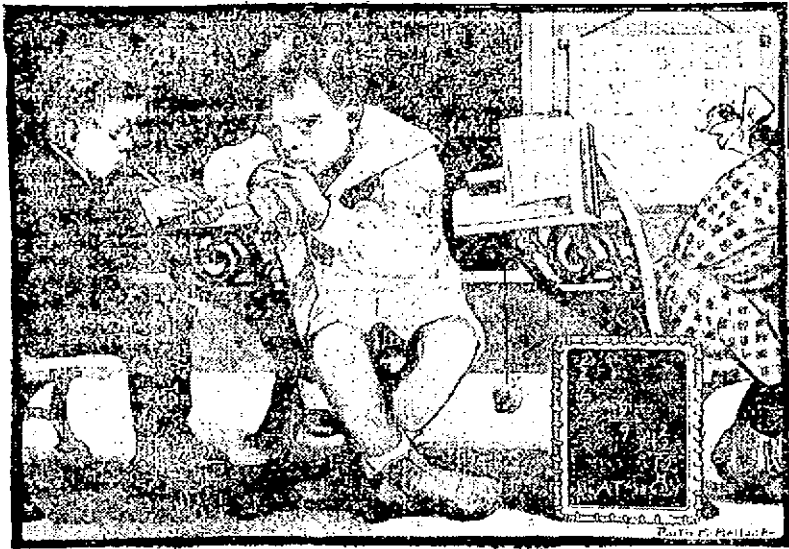

"Under our table," said she. "I will send Roberts for them. Then she flashed, "I will ask her to go," she answered.

"Isn't it wonderful?" asked Johnstone.

He sat on the porch step at her feet.

"I can't think about it just yet," said the girl

THE MASTER-HAND

By Caroline Dale Parke.

It was four o'clock. School was out, and the sun shone brightly upon the road. Klaus, a boy of ten, was walking home, his hands in his pockets, his head bowed. He was thinking of the lesson he had just learned. It was a lesson about the Master-Hand. He had learned that the Master-Hand was the hand of God, and that it was the hand that made the world. He had learned that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the sun and the moon, and that it was the hand that made the flowers and the trees. He had learned that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the birds and the beasts, and that it was the hand that made the men and the women. He had learned that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the world, and that it was the hand that made the life in the world. He had learned that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the world, and that it was the hand that made the life in the world.

great professor at the Music College who received Klaus as he entered the room. And it was Klaus's first lesson. He was to learn the lesson of the Master-Hand. He was to learn that the Master-Hand was the hand of God, and that it was the hand that made the world. He was to learn that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the sun and the moon, and that it was the hand that made the flowers and the trees. He was to learn that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the birds and the beasts, and that it was the hand that made the men and the women. He was to learn that the Master-Hand was the hand that made the world, and that it was the hand that made the life in the world.

"What can you play?" he asked, looking doubtfully at Klaus's red face.

"I can play—anything!" Klaus felt that he could—that morning. "Just try me once," and Klaus's face brightened with a smile. "Well," said the landlady, slowly. "Perhaps—Could you play the cymbals?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Then come this afternoon at two. There is a funeral."

Starch, never beat so happy a heart as a funeral as that of Klaus as he marched along the street. He was playing the cymbals with a will, striking the cymbals past each other with the same free movement that men had used before him in old Egypt, before the days of Christ. The powerful sound of them seemed to surround him and to sweep through the very veins. The cymbals, in their unskilled hands, came striking sharply against his wrists, so that they bled from the cuts.

"That night Klaus dropped two shining silver thalers into his mother's apron."

But a reckoning came on the morning when Klaus must go to his lesson, for the cuts on his wrists grew stiff and sore in the night, and his hands were swollen.

"Never mind the bow-exercise to-day. We will take first the étude," said the professor, as he tuned Klaus's violin.

Klaus began.

"Violin! The bow is slanted," cried the Herr Professor, striking Klaus's stick off the strings, in a temper. "So, again!"

And Klaus began again at the beginning, only to play worse than ever.

"It's my hands," he said, with a little struggle in his throat.

"Not the hands merely, but a stupid carelessness," returned the Herr Professor, standing scornfully up the narrow room.

"No, truly, it is the hands," pleaded Klaus. "I cut them yesterday on the cymbals."

"On the cymbals!" repeated the master, stopping directly before Klaus. "Dreadful, dreadful! Put up the middle," he continued, sternly, and Klaus obeyed in trembling haste. He had known pupils who were sent home from the lesson, but it had never happened to him before. As he opened the door the master called to him.

"I will come soon to thy house. I will see thy father." But Klaus paid no heed to further disgrace or rebuke. He turned for hiding into a vacant room. The tears were maddening him and he was far too miserable to take up at once the thread of his childish play by the brook.

Presently he heard the master's heavy, emphatic steps go down the hall and away. Klaus longested to follow him to beg for just five minutes—but a single moment, even—of trial. But the footsteps died into silence while he hesitated. Then Klaus, tenuous little German that he was, crept back into the master's room, determined to wait for his return and beg his lesson once more.

The Herr Professor had no thought of retaining, but went briskly along the back of the room and into the crowded ways. At Klaus's doorstep he stood quite still, rubbing the back of his head, and saying between his teeth, "Blackhead! Fool! What am I doing?"

Then he turned away. At the corner he met the hen-poult who had come to bring Klaus's father to his house.

"Are you going to Herr Knecht's?" he demanded.

"What can you say to him? What can you say to that poor fellow? He has broken his left wrist. Why, then, he will never play again! Do you understand?"

"Yes," said the hen-poult, moving his big feet uneasily, as if he had been caught in mischief. "But you must say something. Ah, Hummel! That is a worse stupidity than mine. But go on. Perhaps you are determined to comfort. Never to play—and such a time—such good, wholesome playing! Ach, Hummel!" and with a great gesture the Herr Professor strode back to the Music College.

Klaus had crept back into the master's alcove, musty with old German books and maps. He was silent as the hen-poult came in. He had no wish to say, but how could he speak when the master was striding up and down? Klaus quite lost his courage and forgot all that had been in his heart to say. Presently, without warning, the master whipped open his double door and took from it his precious Guarnerius. Was Klaus to hear him play, indeed? In the lessons, he had often seen fragments in his hands. Klaus clapped his hands in the excitement, and again only a word on a promise that glowed the heart of things. Now he was to play! The violin trembled and rang under the attack of his opening chords, and then the clear, full, rich, soiled forth, rich as the color of his eyes, the notes were made by the hand that had led him to the doorway—that had held him, lifting him, now coming to him in full light. Long hours had Klaus himself wrestled with it when he was alone, remembering and again filling in the lost spaces with his own musical thoughts, playing, humming, creating a melody with eagerness and passion. Why had he not known before? That white hand, that hand, they all were his master's.

Thus came out of his corner as if he had been called, his face had upon it a look of wisdom and a look of something hidden away in the heart of a young man.

The master saw him and stopped.

"Klaus, child, are you still here? What is it with you? Why are you here?" for Klaus's eyes were fixed upon a violin.

"I am here," said Klaus, breathlessly, "because I have found the Master-Hand."

"The Master-Hand?" cried the master, under his chin. "What is that?"

"The Master-Hand is the hand of God," said Klaus, "and it is the hand that made the world. It is the hand that made the sun and the moon, and that it is the hand that made the flowers and the trees. It is the hand that made the birds and the beasts, and that it is the hand that made the men and the women. "The Master-Hand?" cried the master, under his chin. "What is that?"

"The Master-Hand is the hand of God," said Klaus, "and it is the hand that made the world. It is the hand that made the sun and the moon, and that it is the hand that made the flowers and the trees. It is the hand that made the birds and the beasts, and that it is the hand that made the men and the women. It is the hand that made the world, and that it is the hand that made the life in the world."

But the Herr Professor laid his hands on his shoulders, looking down into his face as Klaus had never seen him look before.

"Klaus, dear child, dear child," he said, softly, "you are to play. Remember, it is a God-gift to you. Do not imagine it is yours."

He still held him, looking at him, and Klaus had no words to answer.

Suddenly the Herr Professor's face brightened. "Come," he said. "Let us go to that good father of thine. He shall play again in his son. I was an old blackhead before."

Klaus watched him, wondering, as he headed himself again into his room, and then he looked at his father. Then the father took Klaus by the hand and they went out together.

People who passed them on the street wondered where the great musician had found the son, long-checked by, and was he indeed so lovingly upon him as if he were his own.

THE "ALWAYS DIFFERENT" STORY.

By Elizabeth Flint Wade.

"O H, dearest me!" said little Polly as she stood looking into the rain-soaked garden. "I wish it didn't rain. I want to play out of doors."

"When I was a little girl and there came a rainy day," said Aunt Katie, "my mother used to tell me this story."

"When the rain comes tumbling down
In the country of the boys,
All good little girls and boys,
Stay at home and mind their toys."

"But I don't want to play with my toys," said Polly. "Neither do I," added Rob, "this is the second day it has rained and I am tired of them."

"Well, then I will read you a story if you like," replied their Aunt. "Don't you want to hear 'Alice in Wonderland'?"

"But I'm tired of it, Aunt Katie," said Polly. "I love the story, but the people in it always do the same things every time you read the book. Why do they make stories the same? I would like one that was always different. Don't they make them that way, Aunt Katie?"

"Well, well," said Aunt Katie, "you remind me of the little girl I used to be. I liked things different, too, and my mother made me a story that is never the same, no matter how many times you read it. I will get it. I have it in my 'Keepsake Box'."

Aunt Katie left the room and presently returned with a small book of yellowish faded paper, and a little box. "The story is called 'Fanny Frittle's Her Adventures in the Woods, At the Pond, At the School, At the Picnic, In the Meadow, By the Brook, At the Circus, In Grandfather's Barn, and At the Party.' Which adventure would you like to hear about?"

"The one by the brook," said Polly and Rob in one breath; and Polly's eyes sparkled as she added, "I love to play by the brook!"

"Very well," said Aunt Katie. "Take this box. In it you will find slips of paper on which words are printed. I will read the story and when I stop and hold up my finger you must draw a slip of paper from the box and read what it says on it, and the next time Rob will draw and read—each in turn."

"This is the story that Aunt Katie read of Fanny Frittle's Adventure by the Brook, and the words in it printed in capitals are these which Polly and Rob read from the slips of paper which they drew one by one from the box."

"May I go and play by the brook?" said Fanny Frittle to her Grandmother.

Her Grandmother nodded her head on which was a large—GREEN BOTTLE—

"Yes, but don't wet your feet, and take a LONG WOODEN SWOON—to shield you from the sun."

On her way she met Tommy and Poppy. Tommy carrying a—PLATE OF CHESSE—Which Fanny saw them she said,

"Come and play with me by the brook. I have a—BOTTLE OF INK—to catch fish with—a—BAG OF CLOTHESPIN—to build a bridge, and we can hunt for crabs under stones."

Tommy and Fanny turned over stones, but Poppy, who always did things wrong, turned hers under. Fanny found a bag—LEMON PIE under a stone but the others found nothing.

"There are no crabs here," said Fanny; "let us fish!" Tommy and Fanny threw their lines in the brook but Poppy threw hers out. Fanny caught a—DUSTING CLOTH—but the others caught nothing.

"Let us build a bridge," said Fanny. "Tommy you bring a—DISH OF ICE CREAM—and Poppy a YEL. BOW BOWL—and we will sit on the bridge and eat."

"What is that in the water?" said Fanny.

Fanny pulled it out, and found it was a—SEWING MACHINE.

"I will take it home to Grandmother," said Fanny, "and she will make me a—WINDOW CURTAIN—of it."

They were now tired and hungry and sat down to rest on a big—WHITE FLAX—seed and a—BAG OF RICE. Fanny opened her lunch box, and out fell a—BROWN BREAD—and a—SOLDIER—instead of the rice cakes her Grandmother had given her.

"Never mind," said Fanny. "I have some cookies in my pocket," but when she took them out she found they had changed into—JAPANESE LANTERNS.

Just then the sun came down and they started for home, but Poppy ran backward and fell over a—POT-PIG.

"I am so hungry I could eat a—STICK OF BUTTER TOWEL," said Fanny, but when she went to the supper table there was nothing there but a—ROLLING PIN—and a—BLACK KITTEN.

When she went to her room she found a—BROWN TEAPOT—on her bed, and in every chair a big—RED HEN.

"Dear me," said Fanny as she laid her tired head on a—STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE—which she found in place of her pillow. "What a funny time I have had at the brook. When I go to the picnic tomorrow, with Tommy and Poppy, I wonder what strange things will happen there!"

Emile White has rented the Whitefield farm that was sold to William D. White recently. He finished moving Friday.

Edward Thompson was very much alarmed at a strange fellow, accompanied by the Justice of Peace, calling on him one day last week and claiming his noble fox hound, the champion fox dog of the state. As there is some kind of an obligation in the foxing society and Ed being a member, he refused to give the dog up until he could consult the chief counselor, J. N. White.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thompson have severe cases of measles. Mrs. Thompson is recovering nicely but Charley is not improving yet.

John S. Moon has returned from Polkton, Ky., on a short visit and is to move his family.

Thomas Freeman's family has all recovered nicely from the measles, ten of them being down at once.

Daniel Clive has taken a big job of log cutting in the Billie and Preston mustard timber near Harden.

Owing to a misunderstanding their was a big pow wow in the Mt. Hoffer church Sunday night. It was understood that Rev. Aho Hoppy intended to have a certain member turned out of the church and that did not please some members. There was a chewing of the rag in number one style until the minister finally took a part and said the intended three weeks protracted meeting would be discontinued.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Woten were guests of Charles Debo and wife Sunday.

Joseph Comer has become so entangled in fox chasing here of late, we fear, were he near it, he would be foolish enough to attempt to wade the icy waters of Hudson Bay to head off a fox. Jo and his dog were strolling along the banks of Sugar Run when he suddenly spied a fox along the hillside on the opposite side. Without realizing that there was a drop of water in the stream, Jo made a bee-line for the opposite shore to head off Mr. Fox, and when mid-way found himself in water waist deep and so cold that it forced him to yell "boo" which attracted the attention of a neighbor not far distant. When asked if he was in swimming, Jo was so puzzled over his sad predicament he could not make any reply.

E. M. Keller and Jo, Miller are assisting John Pfleger in hauling his wheat and corn to Jackson, where he has engaged it at a good price.

Ray White of Harrisonville, brings our teacher to school on Monday mornings and gets him again on Friday evenings.

Jest Also Makes the World Go Round

AGAINST HIS WILL.

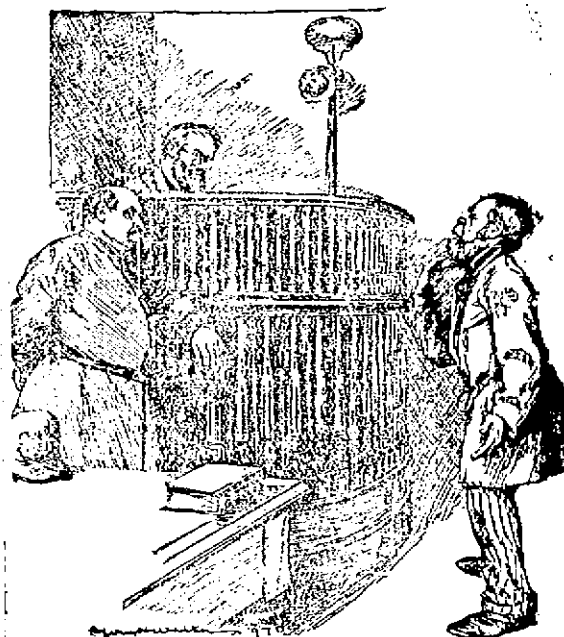

"Well, do you want to see me?"
"No, sir; but I have to."

THE FALL OF MIKE.

"Are ye ready, Mike?"
"Yes, let her—"

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMED.

"Asleep upon a load of coal! I call that a pretty hard bed!"
"Sure, yer honor, but it was soft coal."

TAKEN WITH A LITTLE SALT.

VERY UNLUCKY.
Poet—I am very unlucky.
Friend—What makes you so sure of it?
Poet—Why, even if I wrote something immortal the world would come to an end in a few days.

QUOTIDIAN USEFUL.

Young Wife—And you would like my doughnuts better if they were larger?
That is very complimentary.
Eusebius Labor—Yes; then we are the pale could have a game of quots down by the waterin' tanks.

TIT FOR TAT.

Mrs. De Witt—Do you know Mrs. Torrens?
Mrs. De Witt—Of course I do.
Mrs. De Witt—Then suppose you tell me all the horrid lies she has told you about me, and I'll tell you all the lovely scandal she has repeated about you.

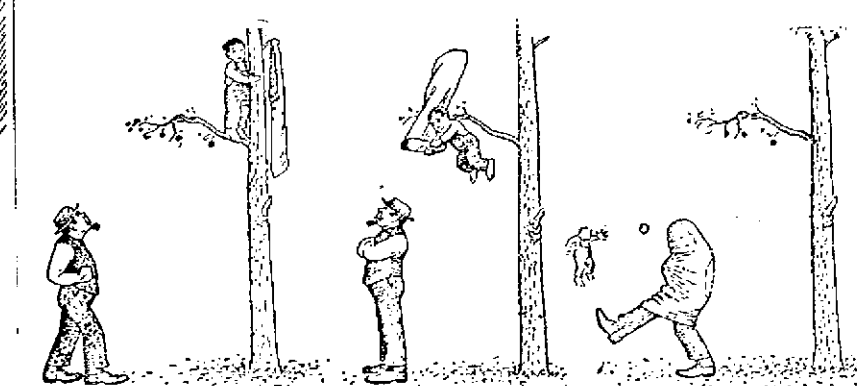

CULTURE.
The Conversationalist (to a well-known authoress)—I am so delighted to meet you. It was only the other day—I saw something of you—about something or other—in some paper!

BEEF RARE.

Teacher—But, Johnny, what do you mean by coming to school with such filthy hands?
Johnny—Aw, I got 'em dirty washin' me face.

SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR.

"Now, this time I've got yes."

"If I go home for me sun he'll get away."

A THING OF THE PAST.

A THING OF THE PAST.

NOT TO BE SEEN.
Old Lady—What is the title of this picture, dear?
Daughter—"Dogs," after Sir Edwin Landseer.
Old Lady—I can see the dogs, but where on earth is Landseer?

HIS PROOF.

The Hobbs—Ah, lady, at one time I was a prosperous dentist.
The Lady—How can I believe you, my poor man?
The Hobbs—How can you doubt me, mum? Why, even de dog shows his teeth when I am around.

ACCOMPLISHED.

Mrs. Dibs-Smythe—We are just back from the continent, where my daughter has been finishing her education. She speaks all languages.
The Professor—Ah! Does she speak Esperanto?

A SUPERFLUOUS QUESTION.

Slopan (to boy who has asked for a penworth of pills)—Do you want them in a box?
Boy—Yess, of course. Think I'm goin' to roll 'em home?

His Share.
Flat—I suppose you and your wife share everything?
Green—Not at all. The minks ain't greedy. She insists that I have all the faults.

A DESERT SPOON.

ONE WOMAN'S WAY.
"Mrs. Stubbs seems to speak almost every known language."
"Yes, she learned them to try to make her cooks feel more at home."

HE PROVED IT.

Guldo—Yes, sir, the worst time I ever had was when I was lost in the bushes for a week.
Lammer—And did you get out?
Guldo—No; I'm lost there yet.

EARNINGS.

Father, today I earned money for the first time in my life.
"Excellent, my son! How did you do it?"
"I lost a bet."
"Lost a bet?"
"Yes, father, and refused to pay it."

SHE QUALIFIED.

He—So your husband has given up smoking? It requires a pretty strong will to accomplish that.
She—Well, I'll have you understand that I have a strong will.

A DIPLOMAT.

"How dare you enter the front door?"
"I'm a man of taste and prefer to talk to a charming lady of the house instead of a homely mermaid, mum."

THE 7:54 TRAIN.

Fat Visitor: "Charming suburb, my boy, charming! But, I say, do you always walk to the station?"
"Oh, no, indeed. Very often I run."

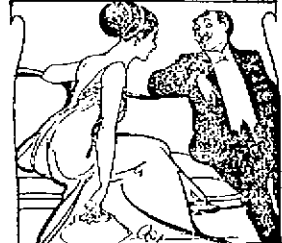

Fat Visitor: "Charming suburb, my boy, charming! But, I say, do you always walk to the station?"
"Oh, no, indeed. Very often I run."

RICE.

A VERY BAD SCRAPE.
ROSE BY ANOTHER NAME.
"You used to call that picture 'Late Autumn.'"
"Yes, but I had no luck with it, so I changed it to 'Early Spring.'"

DO IT AGAIN.
(After failing school.)
Willie—Did you hear that boy swear, Johnnie, when I told him to go away?
Johnnie—No. (Quietly persuasive) Tell him to go away again and I'll listen.

NOT BRAIN TROUBLE.

Roggy—My head troubles me a good deal.
Citty—Well, you have the satisfaction of knowing that it can't be any internal trouble.

SUGGESTION.

Designing Female (concocting)—There is always one remedy for a broken heart, major.
The Major (travelling a widower)—And what is that?
Designing Female—Re-pairing!

SATURDAY SERMONETTE

NONE SO MERCILESS AS MAN.

The whole world stood anxious (as the recent flood swept over Paris and a hundred accounts it read of the havoc of the waters, the cruel and merciless waters, it was the wont to describe them. Which reminds us that in calamities like this we ponder whence comes the vengeful power, carrying such dreadful scourge before it and why does a good and merciful providence allow such things to be? We can not solve the riddle, we can but hold in faith that in some mysterious way it works out to the best when the books are balanced in eternity and everything made to show just in nature's law. But if we be thus mystified in understanding how much more are we puzzled by the actual and wanton cruelty of those monsters in human shape, creatures it might be cast up by the waves, who preyed with incredible lack of mercy upon the misery and misfortunes of their kind. For with the angry surge of the waters over Paris there crept out horrible fiends, who with insatiable lust, practiced awful deeds of blood and rapine. Grown over bold with weakness and misery everywhere about, they skulked not alone through the darkness of night but in the broad light of day plied their nefarious work. As ravening dogs, and it is a pity to use the name of so noble a brute in connection with them, they were shot down on sight, where aim was true, but the many escaped and scattered only to gather a larger and more ferocious pack. They stopped at nothing, not even the mutilation of the bodies of the dead. They are not singular to Paris, but are the hideous spawning of every like disaster, or may be like the vulture they scent foulness across space and come flocking from unknown realms to fatten on carrion. Be that as it may, can their origin and their action be explained? Can anyone diagnosis their character and tell whence springs the mind motive to such appalling excess? Certainly not. The which being admitted will any one claim, that if reason were to conquer mystery and faith and man be ruled by his own laws and his own decrees alone, earth and himself would be any more wisely and safely ordered than they are now. We know the operations of the laws of nature and to a reasonable degree buttress ourselves safely against her violations, while the far greater of our perils from her are the choice of our own folly. Against the violence of his kind we can make scant guard, because it comes unwarning from unexpected quarter and generally attacks him when he is least provisioned against it.

THERE ARE SOME OTHERS.

We spoke, last Saturday, of the commonality of mispronunciation according to standard authority. The examples given were rather surprising, it was thought. By one of those queer little coincidences that are ever turning up to puzzle one, scarce was the article printed, when we ran across an extract from London Tidbits, illustrative of a general deficiency in education, notwithstanding the ever multiplying schools and the millions spent to make that modern enlightenment of which so much is boasted. This instance of dereliction is in spelling, one of the elementary and fundamental principles of education. Tidbits says that at a test of the spelling capabilities of fifty applicants for a clerkship in the offices of the Sidney water and sewerage board they were required to write down from dictation these sentences:

"This celibate was a licentiate in medicine, and held other scholastic diplomas. His characteristics were idiosyncrasies personified—one day taciturn, the next garrulous. Today his facile pen evolves a sapient distich in piquant satire of some literary genius; tomorrow an encomiastic effusion on an illiterate voluptuary. His studies on concrete science were exotic; his researches in natural history esoteric, if not chimerical."

Forty-three of the candidates came to grief and the examining board expressed the opinion that not one out of five graduates from Oxford, England's famous college, could successfully negotiate the same test. That so many should fail in the actual test is surprising for it must be borne in mind that civil service applies to the English public service and young men qualify for public office holding as a profession, much as they would for law or medicine, but the opinion Tidbits expresses of the inability of the average Oxford graduate to make the test is astounding. There is nothing particularly severe in it as the words are of frequent use and the only catch in them is the s sound of c. The illustration, nevertheless, is interesting and important as showing how rapidly spelling is becoming a lost art.

Three billion dollars worth of eggs are laid annually by the hens of the nation. If by their fruit ye shall know them, the hen should be the national bird. Wouldn't it look fine on the back of our coins holding a lay in one upraised foot and hanging onto the national debt with the other.

NOT ONE WHIT DIFFERENT.

"By passing so many laws and obeying so few of them we are breeding here in Ohio a disrespect for law that tends to make anarchists, or to say the least, radicals of a most dangerous type," was the somewhat doleful declaration of Senator Marshall N. Duvall of Jefferson county, to a recent gathering of his constituency. However eloquent and forceful the honorable gentleman may be he is not accurate, a thing seldom held in esteem by orators of such repute as he, though accuracy should be the very foundation of oratory. Passing of laws, unless they happen to be violently opposed to popular sentiment, or absurdly foolish, never in itself tends to breed anarchists or radicals. A hundred and more laws are spread on the statute books every session of the legislature in every state as well as in Ohio. Nobody, except the lawyers and only a few of them, but not excepting the members of the legislature, knows or cares what they are. Not knowing it is impossible the laws should have effect on them. As a matter of fact, anarchy and disorder, in so far as the law has effect on them, are the outgrowth of its non-enforcement solely. A thousand laws idle and unknown affect nothing, one law rigorously applied makes high respect for government and authority. It is esteemed by a great many to talk about observance of the law being a mark of patriotism and good morals, but the bald truth of the matter is no one cares for the law unless a particular enactment suits his interest or his fancy. It can be safely set down that each and every citizen is more or less given to the fracture of statute or ordinance. Therefore does it follow again that the only thing which makes him respect one is its operation with a firm, sure hand. And further that bad legislatures are said to be, they are not guilty of additional wickedness because they persist in writing down so many new rules in the book. Every legislature might go out of existence in the twinkling of eye and not be resurrected for a thousand years and the world would be no better for that, nor worse either.

ON A BUSINESS BASIS.

The circumstance that a former attaché of The Times has just gone to Spokane to become the managing editor of a new daily paper to begin publication the first of March, suggests though of the marvelous change that has come about in the publication business. A decade ago it was a common saying that in the newspaper business there was no business. There was "a long felt want," a few cases of type and an ancient press, that had seen service in a dozen or more such ventures, were gathered together and a journal that boasted everybody else and knew how to run every business except its own, was born. May be it lived and may be it did not, but most generally it did not for if it survived it did so in spite of a policy that in any other adventure spelled failure. See how different, is this enterprise to which this young man goes. Its promoters have studied the field where it is to be launched for months. They have figured down to a nicety not what it thinks it wants, but what there is a demand for. There is no guess work, no haphazard and inefficient arrangement. No waiting on the future for development. Every detail has been provided to facilitate the production and delivery of what the field will demand and pay for. The best equipment mechanically that money can buy has been installed, editors, managers, solicitors, reporters, pressmen, operators, printers, route agents and newsboys have been employed and the first issue will be as complete as though the paper were of long establishment. In a word it is a business venture, founded on business principles and to be conducted according to the requirements of the same.

REACHING FOR HER PLACE.

The census of this year may reveal the astonishing fact that Texas is the third state of the union, only New York and Pennsylvania standing ahead of her, in the order named. If the estimates of the Texan were taken as the actual figures, there would be no doubt of this being the case. That Texas has grown some, phenomenally, and at a far greater ratio than any of her sisters, is scarce to be disputed. It is doubtful, however, if she has gained the two and a half million she claims, and yet she may have. Her entire growth does not appear to have exceeded others so superlatively because her towns have not expanded any more rapidly than others where she leads far ahead in the multiplication of her farming communities. A hundred new farms opened in a county do not show as multitudinously as the same number of new houses in a town, but they mean greater increase in population as the families on a farm will average larger than those in town. But no matter if Texas is not growing as fast as she claims, it is a reasonable certainty that before another two decades roll by she will be the biggest of all the sisterhood of the states in population as she is in area. Ordinarily we reck little of her mightiness. She reaches eight hundred miles from east to west and thirteen hundred from north to south, a nation in herself. She is not a rolling plain as commonly supposed. She has valleys, hills and mountains and every variety of climate. Her resources of coal, oil, iron and silver are wonderful and she can grow in abundance almost anything that is grown anywhere else in the nation.

Many men act as if they were "so many" that w should think their wives would feel as if they had committed bigamy.

NOVEL, BUT REMEDIAL.

A local dealer contributes to the gaiety of the all-prevailing wrangle over the cause of the high prices of food-stuffs, the suggestion, that the price of meats could be kept down by the law forbidding the slaughter and sale of a calf before it had reached the age of maturity, so to speak, that is before it was a year old. Like other remedies advanced this looks plausible on its face and that is all. Waiving question of the exceedingly doubtful expediency of the evil of the law trenching still further upon the individual right, in effort to serve the public, as this would be, it could have but one effect, to make the cost of beef meat higher, instead of lowering it, and also to increase the general price of living. Calves are sold, not because their sale is profitable, but because the keeping of them is unprofitable. As a rule the farmer raises as many cattle as he has pasturage to support only for dairy purposes, the milk and butter from them. So much more are they regarded as valuable for these uses that not infrequently calves are killed as soon as they are dropped and no attempt made to keep them until they can be marketed. Thus it would appear if the killing or selling of them for food purposes were penalized by the statute, the ultimate result would be actually no more cattle, but enhanced cost of beef, milk and butter, through enforced scarcity of all. One thing, at least, is indubitably certain and that is such a law as suggested would place a most serious obstacle in the way of successful dairy farming.

IN THEIR OWN HANDS.

It is monotonous, if not strange, how every one who has a grievance first thinks of running to the legislature to have it righted. Here, for instance are the New Orleans merchants appealing to the legislature to abolish lagniappe from which they allege they are suffering dire hardship and loss. But you do not know what lagniappe means? It is a French word that may be interpreted with tolerable accuracy by our word tip. It is somewhat wider, however in operation. In the early days of New Orleans, when the stores carried everything, it was the practice of merchants to give children and negroes, whom came on errand from father or master and made a purchase, a piece of candy, or knickknack of some sort. Sales were made honestly on long credit and it was also to make the customer some small present when he settled. These gifts were called lagniappe. In America a custom always degenerates, or grows into excess, therefore has it come to such a pass in New Orleans that every customer demands his lagniappe. The effect can be surmised. It is intolerable and ruinous. The merchants sought to eradicate it by a common agreement. Many customers became incensed and the agreement was abortive, through the weak-kneed dealer breaking it. Hence the appeal to the legislature, which is asked to make lagniappe a statutory crime. It is thought, however, that body will leave the tradesmen to work out their own salvation or destruction. Lagniappe is an institution in which the vast body of voters is interested and it will not be safe for him or any legislator to lay desecrating hand upon it.

THE END IN SIGHT.

Few things have started with such pung beginning and attained such magnificent proportions as the project to improve the inland waterways. About fourteen years ago Colonel John L. Vance, then the editor of a country weekly, published at Gallipolis, started a movement to canalize the Ohio on a six foot stage. He was regarded almost unanimously as a crank and his scheme as entirely visionary. Nothing discouraged, however, Vance kept "plugging" away. He soon gathered a few other earnest souls about him and the Ohio River Improvement association was formed. It had all up-stream navigation and the stream was ever running low and the current swift but inch by inch the good-craft Progress, manned by indomitable Energy and keen Foresight, crept ahead. The project enlarged as study and discussion brought out its advantages and it not only grew to a demand for an increased stage of nine feet from Cairo to Pittsburg but took in the canalization of all the great streams of the country and has made that idea the policy of the government. Today its mission is practically accomplished. This congress will pass a bill providing for the creation of a permanent 9-foot stage in the Ohio. Not all the money required for the purpose, sixty-three millions, will be given in a lump sum, but it will be provided for by what is known as a continuing appropriation, that is each year so much will be expended as the best service will permit. It is estimated the entire project can be completed in ten years. This is not all, though, splendid as it is, which has sprung from the agitation of which Colonel Vance was the prime mover and official all these years. Improvement of waterways has, as stated, become the fixed policy of the government and the next river and harbor bill will carry a provision for a continuing appropriation of six hundred million dollars to this end.

The Missouri young lady who has succeeded in trisecting an angle, and says she can solve the perpetual motion problem, probably couldn't divide up $10 a month so as to supply a multiplying family and leave a remainder.

Some delvers into the mysteries of the evolution of man now claim that the human race originally began life in the form of trees. There are a few "sticks" left to bear out the theory.

EVERY LITTLE HELPS.

Mayor Searey is said to be considering the advisability of declaring a general municipal clean-up day. What determination he will reach can not be forecasted, but his affirmative conclusion would seem to be for the best. The idea has been carried out in other towns with admirable results and it is not to be thought for a moment that Portsmouth would lag behind any in such an undertaking. We are not so much impressed with its importance, considered from the sanitary point of having the entire city, public places and private premises, put in cleanliness and order, as we are of its permanent effect upon the wholesomeness and beauty of the city. No matter how diligent and efficient public officials may be in promoting sanitary conditions and improving general appearances, there can not be a much more beautiful Portsmouth, unless each and every citizen is enthused to lend a helping hand. It is concerted action that produces the wide and striking effect. Clean streets and alleys, carefully kept parks are to be desired, but it is the painted house, the pretty lawn and the pervading air of neatness everywhere that makes the actual beauty of a place. Not everyone could be interested in a clean-up day, but many would be and out of the fine result thus shown and the enthusiasm engendered there might be a pride of public spirit created that would with the advance of years become all encompassing, working magnificent change in the general appearance of the Peerless.

A WILL AND A WAY.

Billy Sunday is coming to Portsmouth. Waiving aside the glorious anticipating some church people are building on his advent, there is ample cause for every citizen to felicitate over the announcement. Sunday is an evangelist with many more engagements open to him than he would be able to fill in the years yet to be vouchsafed him. When the request for him to come here was preferred, there were committees, representing anywhere from a dozen to twenty towns, in Youngstown, waiting for an audience with him to extend the same invitation. Of the two open dates for the year he gave Portsmouth one, but so far he has declined to assign the other. It is thus seen that among many competitors Portsmouth has won favor and distinction, palpable evidence not only of her importance and that she has the people who know how to do things. For from all accounts it was the manner in which her delegation presented their case that won so signal a triumph for them and the town. In a material way that triumph can be counted on as doing a great deal for Portsmouth. It will give her a tremendous amount of free advertising and it will inspire a stronger confidence in her ability to do things, when she sets her will to the doing. We need advertising and we need a stronger and broader spirit of civic pride. One of our principal drawbacks is that we have too long been lacking in serious conviction of the consequence of our home city and the greatness the future holds for her. Every act accomplished that brings to us keener realization of these facts helps to their increase and more surely sets Portsmouth in the path of progress and growth. Thus is it that the coming of Billy Sunday here arises to a matter of moment, aside from its religious significance.
